Boy Scout Councils Unite

ORCHESTRA BEATS BLUE LAWS

FLAGS MINGLE

The near-zero temperature of this morning did not prevent a warm greeting between some 1,500 Boy Scouts of the Pittsburgh and South Hills Councils, who merged into one organization on the Tenth Street Bridge in the presence of officials of both groups. J. L. Taylor is executive of the South Hills Council.

WELCOME

Official merger was effected when F. F. Schauer, commissioner of the Pittsburgh Council, shook hands with B. F. Davis, commissioner of the South Hills Council.

PARADE DOWNTOWN

Following merging of two councils, the scouts paraded through the downtown streets, headed by the Langley High School band, to the Penn Theater where they attended a motion picture show. A. T. Benson, scout executive of the Pittsburgh Council, is now scout executive of the newly-formed Allegheny County, West, Council.

A Brave Irishman
Troy and Atlantis
One More Octopus
Dead? What of It?

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

(Copyright, 1928.)

A REAL fighting Irishman has come to America, William Thomas Cosgrave, president of the Irish Free State. Diffident, keen light blue eyes, soft voice, iron will and a lion's courage. That is a picture of the Irish President, for whom fear does not exist, not even the only fear admitted by his relatives, the Celtic chiefs of Gaul, who admitted that they feared one thing, that the sky might fall on them.

PROF. BORCHARDT, like many learned Germans satisfied to devote a life to establishing one fact, tells you that the "Lost Atlantis" really existed at one time, and was located on a now vanished sea in inland Africa. And far-famed Troy, inhabited by Helen, who "launched a thousand ships," was part of Atlantis.

ALSO that "Pillars of Hercules," that little boys read about in their mythology, were not the Straits of Gibraltar, but located on what is now an African desert.

This old earth has changed marvellously as the continents have approached and separated in a slow dance spreading over millions of years, seas and lakes being born and dying.

A NEW "big" oil company comes of merging the Texas Corporation and California Petroleum. This vigorous little octopus owns $530,000,000 and is nearly as big as any of the many little octopuses into which old Standard Oil was chopped up years ago. Now, the Standard Oil fragments "of New Jersey, Indiana, California, New York," are each worth more than the mother octopus was worth when she was chopped up.

NOW that Britain has gone into the oil business, Americans are not as much afraid of big business as they were.

You must be big to meet a trust with the British Empire back of it.

SEVEN men were working in a steel caisson, building a bridge in Panama City. The caisson fell into the water, all were drowned.

Their names, Bates, Turner, Welch, Ryoyalt, Oxdafer, Suiner and Holden, will be forgotten tomorrow.

If we can afford such valuable lives in the regular routine of business, we can afford a few lives to develop flying.

AN IMPORTANT British commission will study, in India, the "Perils of the British Empire," meaning dissatisfaction in India, threatening British dominion.

The serious thing in India is the fact that British protection, against old plagues and famines, has added 100,000,000 to the population of India.

WESTERN farmers that paid a high bounty for coyotes found that field mice multiplied enormously and destroyed the alfalfa. It is dangerous to interfere with nature's processes, even her destructive processes.

SENATOR HEFLIN of Alabama did what he could, quite a good deal, to help, politically, Gov. Al Smith of New York. Americans as a whole take seriously the theory that a man's religion is his own business, that religion should be kept out of politics and that religious attacks are disgraceful to those guilty of them.

MR. PINCHOT, formerly Governor of Pennsylvania, says, "Al Smith has not the slightest chance of getting the Democratic nomination." He is mistaken.

MR. PINCHOT says also, "we have never had a President who was really interested in enforcement since the Eighteenth Amendment was passed." He

Lindy a Question Mark To Arkansas Freshmen

By International News Service.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark., Jan. 21.—Four freshmen in the University of Arkansas do not know who Charles Lindbergh is.

One of them thinks he was the prime minister of Sweden during the fiftieth century; one thinks he was a German general in the World War; one thinks he is the leader of the Bolshevists in Russia, while the fourth understands Lindbergh was the battle line that the Allies had such difficulty in breaking through in 1918.

These answers were found among papers handed in at a quiz in a freshman history course there today.

JEAN HOGUE AND HAZEL SEVERS

High school students at Chester, W. Va., Jean Hogue, 18, and Hazel Severs, 18, were arrested in the Pennsylvania station after they had run away from home. They had spent their money and were looking for a place to sleep. They're going back to Chester.

With the lashing gale slowly subsiding and higher temperatures on the way, relief was in sight today from the stinging cold and wind which caused one death in this district, much suffering and property damage.

The weather bureau thermometer registered 9 degrees at 8 and 9 o'clock this morning, the lowest for 24 hours, then began a slow ascent. Tonight the minimum will be about 15 degrees, Forecaster W. S. Brotzman predicted, while tomorrow will see the mercury in the upper twenties, with skies clear—a bracing, midwinter day. Unofficial temperatures of zero were reported from exposed points in the county.

The furious west wind which whipped this district steadily for 36 hours this morning was blowing at 20 miles an hour. Today the wind will shift to the southwest, the forecaster said, and will diminish to an ordinary air movement.

The center of the high pressure area which brought the cold to this region veered southward overnight and today Louisiana, Mississippi and adjacent states experienced temperatures ranging from 20 to 30.

J. H. Sweeney, 70, of Tarentum was found frozen to death along the Culmerville Pike in West Deer township yesterday.

The sudden strong blasts of icy wind and the slippery streets resulted in four women being thrown from their feet at Sixth avenue and Wood street last night, one woman breaking her left arm and the others being bruised and cut. Re-

GIRL HUNT SHIFTS TO CAPITAL

By International News Service.

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Detectives today left New York for Washington to investigate the most tangible clue yet received in the disappearance of Miss Frances St. John Smith, 18-year-old heiress and Smith College student.

Search for the missing daughter of St. John Smith, wealthy broker of this city, swung suddenly toward the nation's capital as a group of socially prominent women in this city, headed by Mrs. Charles H. Sabin, prepared to trace down a score of reports that the girl was being held for ransom.

Postal inspectors had joined the hunt upon the receipt by the Smith family of a letter posted in New York demanding $2,400 for the safe return of Frances. It was mailed before Smith raised the reward to $10,000.

The latest clue from Washington came from four different sources, all agreeing in their description, which tallies with that of Miss Smith. A girl believed to be the missing heiress entered a restaurant in the capital with a young man and fainted at a table when she scanned a newspaper article called to her attention by her escort. She was carried upstairs and revived, departing two hours later in a large sedan.

The four persons reporting the incident, which occurred Wednesday, insisted that they could not have been mistaken in their identity.

At the Smith residence, in this city, much interest was expressed in the Washington report, and it was believed that St. John Smith, Jr., brother of Frances, who came here from Northampton with a detective to follow out clues to his sister's whereabouts, would go to the Capital.

Mrs. Sabin, a classmate of Mrs. Smith, knowing her daughter from

"Comin' Through Rye" Gets "Sax" Tooter Off

Three hours after Larry Guard, musician, had been arrested he bethought himself of his saxophone. A patrolman was dispatched to look for it where Guard had been arrested at Lacock and Federal streets. The patrolman found it where Guard had abandoned it in a doorway.

"Comin' Through the Rye," played at the request of Magistrate E. M. Hough, won for Guard his discharge on a drunkenness charge.

SUNDAY CONCERTS LEGAL

Sunday symphony concerts do not constitute a violation of the century-old Pennsylvania blue laws, the Allegheny County Courts declare. In an opinion handed down today by Judges R. A. Kennedy and D. M. Miller, of the County Court, officers, members and musicians of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society, defendants in the case, were acquitted.

Declaring that the blue laws of 1797 are "more than a century old and evidently intended to forbid actual physical, material interference with the quiet rest and repose of the Sabbath day, and not to prohibit the obviously harmless and even the ancient custom of the rendition of music on that day," the court concluded that "the defendants can not be held guilty of the violation of the act."

The decision marks the close of a long legal battle instituted last May following a Sunday concert given by the Pittsburgh Symphony Society in Syria Mosque, when the Allegheny County Sabbath Association, prosecuting the case under the old Sunday laws, caused the arrest of eight persons, including officers of the association and several musicians who took part in the program. The opinion is regarded important inasmuch as it defines the status of classical music in comparison with baseball games, theatrical productions and other forms of recreation and entertainment which may be given on Sunday.

The defendants are George E. Benson, Richard S. Rauh, Elias Breeskin Bert Floersheim, Wilmer J. Jacoby, Edward Specter, Max R. Seifert, Israel Weinstein and Homer Ochsenhirt.

They were arrested on charges of "unlawfully conducting, giving, holding and participating in a concert on the Lord's Day, which concert was not worship or work of necessity or public charity." Information was made before a magistrate, who on hearing the case adjudged the defendants guilty and ordered each to pay a fine of $25. From this judgment an appeal was allowed in the County Court.

In their opinion, after quoting the text of the acts alleged to have been violated, Judges Kennedy and Miller observe that the statute has been before the court many times in Pennsylvania for violation of many of its tenets, but that never before for the playing of symphony music on Sunday. It was pointed out, therefore, that former decisions did not relate to symphony concerts.

Goethals Dead in N. Y.

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—(AP.)—Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals, engineer in charge of building the Panama Canal, died at his home here today. Mrs. Goethals and his two sons were with him.

Gen. Goethals was chief engineer of the Panama Canal from 1907 to 1914, and the first civil governor of the Panama Canal zone from 1914 to 1916. During his army career he occupied various important posts, retiring in March, 1919, to devote his attention to his private practice as an engineer.

He was consulting engineer for the port of New York authority during the construction of the Holland vehicular tunnel.

Chief Draws Line On Nurse Job For Police

NEW PHILADELPHIA, O., Jan. 21.—"My husband is out of town," a woman telephoned Police Chief Emery Gintz, "and I want you to send up a policeman to watch the babies while I go to lodge meeting."

"Sorry," said the chief, "but this is not a nursery."

Robbers Beat Hat Man

Burglars dressed in aviation caps and leather coats, beat John H. Sitterly, prominent hat merchant, over the head in his home at 89 Oakwood avenue, West View, and escaped under revolver fire without obtaining loot.

The front door of the Sitterly home was forced open at 2:30 o'clock this morning and the burglars went to the bedroom of Sitterly. Each carried a gun and, pointing them at Sitterly, demanded he tell where his money was hidden.

When he refused, they struck him over the head. Bud Jamison, nephew of Sitterly, hearing the noise, obtained a gun and began shooting from a landing on the second floor. The burglars fled without being hit, and neighbors said they saw two men run across a bridge nearby.

West View police said Sitterly's wounds appeared to have been made by knucklers and not by the butts of revolvers.

FOUR BURNED TO DEATH IN HOMES HERE

Four persons in the Pittsburgh district met death late yesterday and today as a result of fires in their homes. The victims included three children and an aged woman. The mother of two of the tots made a heroic attempt to save the lives of her children.

Helpless and unable to attract attention, Mrs. Harry Umstad, 65, of 523 South Graham street, was burned to death in her wheel chair this morning during a 15-minute absence of her husband.

Mrs. Umstad was an invalid and was deaf. Her husband, a traveling salesman for a Baltimore drug company, attended her constantly when he was at home, and while he was gone on trips a maid cared for her.

This morning Mr. Umstad went to a store and was gone a quarter

REPORT SANDINO INJURED, NOT DEAD AS RESULT OF AIR RAID

Mother, Babe at Death's Door Following Mine Fire

ATTEMPT TO WRECK FIRE TRUCK

Fire destroyed three frame houses in a row owned by the Pittsburgh Coal Company at Hackett, near Finleyville, yesterday, driving Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Black out of their home in a driving snowstorm. Finleyville firemen refused to fight the flames. An attempt was made to wreck the Monongahela fire truck bearing 20 men. Planks were removed from the bridge and it was necessary to lay in railroad ties and rocks as shown in the foreground.

FLAMES SWEEP ROW OF FRAME HOUSES

This was the second fire of mysterious origin within three months at the Pittsburgh Coal Company houses. Finleyville firemen, threatened with bodily harm by men described as union sympathizers, abandoned a blaze in November before it had been extinguished and did not respond to a call yesterday, fearing violence, it was said in Finleyville. The entire row of a dozen or more frame houses was threatened with destruction when Monongahela firemen arrived.

AFTER THE STORK HAD CALLED

Black carried his wife from the rickety frame structure in which they made their home to the home of John Proctor, Negro, a short distance away. She was suffering from shock and exposure. Within a few hours came the stork, winging through the snow and darkness of a January night. There was only Mrs. Proctor, mother of four children, the youngest two and a half months, to administer to her. Black is shown bending over his wife while the baby reposes in a bundle of blankets on the chair behind him.

BELIEVE SANDINO HURT

By FELIPE LA FRANC,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Jan. 21.—Gen. Sandino, the thorn in the side of the American Marines since the recent ambush, in which five Americans were killed, is not believed dead as has been persistently reported since early in the week.

The rebel leader, however, is suffering from injuries received from a bomb from an American airplane.

Natives arriving at Taipaneca have reported to residents there that Gen. Sandino was seriously wounded last Saturday by a bomb from an airplane. He suffered injuries to his head and one knee and is now being cared for by a Mexican physician.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The Nicaraguan question flared forth in the Senate when Senator Dill, Democrat, of Washington, demanded the recall of American Marines and charged that the liberal forces in Nicaragua were bought off by American money borrowed from New York banks.

Dill's speech revived the controversy over Latin-American condition which has been allowed to remain dormant since the Pan-American Congress opened at Havana and it drew a sharp defense of the administration's policy from one of his fellow Democrats, Senator Bruce, of Maryland.

Bruce declared that most of the opposition to the government's policy in Nicaragua is coming from radicals and Communists who delight in criticizing this government, no matter what its foreign relations may be.

He expressed the hope that the powers might be broadened to include a probe of the correspondence carried on by radicals in this country with radicals in Mexico and Nicaragua.

INGRAM NAMES POLICE HEAD

William Campbell, who has been acting police chief of Ingram for two months, last night was appointed to this position at a meeting of the borough council. Council also reappointed Patrolmen Louis Wagner and R. L. Hitchens and Street Commissioner David Thomas. An ordinance providing for the widening of Windsap road passed the first reading.

CONFESSES TO ALDINE HOLDUP

The $2,400 holdup at the Aldine Theater on December 14 was solved in Morals Court today when Frederick West, 24, of Fairmont, W. Va., confessed that he was one of the two bandits who cornered Gerald Murphy, assistant manager of the theater, in the cashier's office and escaped with the day's receipts.

Show girls brought his arrest, West told in a signed confession. West was taken in New Albany, Ind., Thursday after he had been traced through four cities in which a tabloid musical comedy played.

In Bellaire, O., two days after the holdup, he met a former Fairmont friend who had since become a private detective. West confided that he had been "in on the Aldine job" and that he was moving westward to meet certain chorus girls. The detective's tip kept police watching the show's route and West's arrest followed.

In Morals Court he refused to "squawk," but he named a pal for whom police are searching as his confederate.

Woman Drinks Poison

After the North Side patrol delivered Nettie Clare, 32, 1503 Arch street, to Presbyterian Hospital, a poison victim, Charles Zimmerman, 913 Union avenue, was transferred from the hospital to the police station. Zimmerman had cut his throat January 6. He told Magistrate E. M. Hough this morning the act was caused by moonshine. He was discharged.

Miss Clare swallowed iodine in her home last night, but refused to tell the police why.

lief organizations, including the Salvation Army, the Pittsburgh Association for the Improvement of the Poor and the Volunteers of America reported early today that an unusually large number of homeless men had applied for lodgings during the night.

The women injured downtown were Mrs. Mary Stucherkel, of 614 Armandale street, Mrs. A. R. Seaky, of 109 Lincoln avenue, Millvale, Mrs. Anna Savgeny, of 106 North Jackson street and Miss Margaret Brigley, of 1234 Metropolitan street. Miss Brigley broke her left arm and was treated at the Allegheny General Hospital. Mrs. Seaky also was given medical attention at that hospital and then sent home. The others were treated at the scene, being helped into nearby buildings and attended.

THE DIVORCE MILL

'HOME TO MOTHER'

They were married one year when her husband sent her back to her mother with the admission that he was unable to support her, Marie Ihrig, 22, of 1326 Arch street, averred in her divorce complaint against Irvin Ihrig, 22.

"WILD PARTIES"

Her husband hugged and kissed other women in her presence at "wild parties" in their home, Wilma Myers, 27, of 130 South Fairmount avenue, testified in her divorce action against Lynn W. Myers, 30, traveling salesman, in Common Pleas Court. Mrs. Myers told of her husband having knocked her down and of intercepting a letter written to him by another woman, who upbraided him for having paid the writer so little attention. The Myers were married in Philadelphia in 1919 and came to Pittsburgh in 1923, separating last year.

of an hour. When he returned he found the burned body of his wife in the chair near an open stove.

It is believed that the aged woman wheeled herself near the fire and her skirt ignited. Members of the family of Mrs. Gertrude M. Graham, living on the second floor, had heard nothing. They smelled something burning and began an investigation about the time Mr. Umstad returned. The blaze did not spread from the chair.

Left alone in their home at 1613 Lynn avenue, Turtle Creek, yesterday, two children were burned to death while their frantic mother, who had returned and saw the house ablaze, fought with firemen to enter the burning home to save the tots.

The children, are Walter Beeson, 2, and his sister, Elizabeth, aged 3 months. Both the father and mother were prostrated and are being cared for at the home of relatives.

The fire occurred late yesterday destroying the house at a loss of $4,000. The father had just left for work and the mother had gone to the home of a neighbor. The mother, leaving the neighbor's home, saw the smoke pouring from her house and the reflection of the fire sweeping the interior. Firemen and neighbors kept her from sacrificing her own life in an impossible rescue attempt as well as holding back the father who had been notified at his work nearby.

Harriet Doris Brown, 4, of 7419 Frankstown avenue died in the Homeopathic Hospital late yesterday from burns suffered in her home earlier in the day. She was warming herself in front of an open grate when her clothing ignited.

infancy, has taken charge of the search for the family, answering the telephone and receiving information from many persons believing they saw the missing girl.

Mrs. Sabin is convinced that Frances did not elope nor is in hiding for the thrill of the experience.

"Frances had no interest in any young man, I am sure," she said. "If she had there would have been no need for concealment."

Hugo Bezdek, Jr., son of the veteran football coach at Penn State College and a freshman at Dartmouth, whose disappearance was linked with that of Miss Smith, tore asunder the mystery of his own fate by appearing at the McAlpin Hotel, where his mother is staying. He was surprised at the concern felt for his safety and explained he had been in Vermont.

Too Cold for Criminals; Police Rest

Burglars, robbers and bandits are laying down the law to the public these days. They insist on the best of conditions!

"Last night," said Inspector of Detectives Clyde Edeburn, "was the first in a long time there hasn't been a burglary or a 'stickup.' It was too cold."

BEER BOSS TOLD TO TRAVEL

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Jan. 21.—Scarface Al Capone, Chicago's beer baron, still is a man without a city. He is going to leave Miami Beach by invitation. A star-chamber caucus of the City Council reached this decision following an editorial crusade by the Miami Beach Sun, of which Kent Watson is publisher.

Capone advised City Manager Renshaw that he would leave peaceably. He did not know where he would go, he said.

A week ago Capone took a seasonal lease on a fashionable Indian Creek drive villa for $3,000. He had been advised by Police Chief Leslie Quigg of Miami, four miles across Biscayne Bay, that he could remain in this district so long as he behaved himself.

But Miami Beach is a municipality distinct from Miami and there were citizens who objected to Capone's presence, among them being the crusading editor of the Sun who beaten by gangsters several weeks ago because he demanded the closing of what he characterized as a crooked gambling house.

Renshaw received instructions from Mayor Newton Lummus to request Capone to leave, after members of the Miami Beach Women's Club and the Committee of One Hundred, a secret political organization, had protested against his continued presence.

What chance of enforcement has a law if the people and Presidents are not interested in enforcing it?

TEN thousand schoool teachers in Spain are paid fifty-eight cents a day. The curse of Spain and the cause of her downfall from great power have been lack of education and substitution of superstition for education.

The fact that ten thousand Spanish school teachers exist is, however, a hopeful sign, even though their pay is a disgrace.

START FIFTEENTH YEAR OF WIDOWS' PENSION FUND

Beginning its fifteenth year in the work of administering widows' pensions, the Allegheny County Board of Trustees of the Mothers' Assistance Fund has reorganized following the re-appointment of Mrs. Harry J. Miller and Mrs. John W. Thomas, whose terms had expired. Mrs. Marcus Spiro, president of the board, has served continuously since the establishment of the mothers' assistance fund in 1913. Other members are Mrs. P. W. Morgan, Miss Eleanor Hanson and Miss Mary C. Murphy. Miss Rose Porter is executive secretary. Under the increased appropriation made by the last legislature the Allegheny county board now contributes to the support of 839 families, including more than 3,500 fatherless children.

U. S. POLICY IN HAVANA SUCCESS

By GEORGE R. HOLMES,
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

HAVANA, Jan. 21.—The rough spots in America's relations with the other republics of the western hemisphere are rapidly being ironed out in Havana.

Under the skillful but unostentatious guidance of Charles E. Hughes, most of the trouble that threatened to make the sixth Pan-American conference a fighting affair has been dissipated and today there is every prospect that after four or five more weeks of diplomatic maneuvering the parley will come to an end with the usual resolutions of non-political character.

Around the committee tables—and what is more important—around the nightly dinner tables in Havana, the real work of the conference is being done. The self-effacement of the United States delegation in the matter of accepting important posts in the conference, and the elevation of the statesmen of the smaller republics to those same posts of responsibility has had a notable effect in allaying the suspicion which some of the delegates felt about "the Colossus of the North" when they came to Havana.

NO ISSUES YET

Outside of purely routine organization work, the conference has not attempted to accomplish anything this week. Committees have been appointed, have met and organized; the physical machinery of the conference has been assembled and put in running order, but

STUDY MEDICINE FOR FAR LANDS

From the Near and Far East and the frozen Baltic these girls have come to study medicine at the Women's Medical College, Philadelphia, and will take knowledge home with them to improve conditions in their native lands. Premola Poona is from Bombay, India; Saniyeh Harboob from Beirut, Syria, and Mary Markuze from Riga, Latvia.

OFFICIALS CLASH ON SPAN DELAY

The Sixth Street Bridge superstructure positively will not be started before April 1, L. J. Affelder, contracting manager for the American Bridge Company, awarded the work, told the county commissioners.

Denying any ulterior motives behind the delay, Affelder declared that, until river conditions insure complete safety, work will not be started. "Our contract calls for starting the superstructure April 1," he said. "So far we have lived up to that contract and we intend to do so until the span is completed."

Commissioner Charles C. McGovern called the bridge company official's attention to the protests of merchants affected by the span. "They are putting up bridges all over the country—the Allegheny River is not that dangerous that work on the superstructure could not be started now," the commissioner said. "Can't your company do something immediately to relieve the situation?" he said.

"Not unless you can regulate the river and guarantee us absolute protection," Affelder replied. "As I have stated our contract calls for work to start April 1."

"Yes, that's the mystery of the whole thing," Commissioner McGovern retorted.

"No mystery about it," said Affelder.

Commissioner McGovern asked: "If the county would offer a bonus could you start the work sooner than April 1?"

"A bonus does not enter into the situation—it all depends on the river, and regardless of a bonus, we cannot speed the work up," Affelder answered.

Missing Persons Sleuths Asked to Find Dog

The Bureau of Missing Persons was asked today to extend its activities to include search for lost dogs.

In a letter signed Richard S. Quigley, member of the State Senate from the Twenty-sixth District, the bureau officers learned:

"I am enclosing a cut of my little dog that was stolen from my grounds near Lock Haven by a passing motorist. Will you please put up this notice in your office, that the men on the force can see it and be on the lookout."

It's worth $50 reward to the sleuth who finds the dog.

BORN AS MINE HOME BURNS

By ALBERT GOUGH,
Staff Correspondent.

FINLEYVILLE, Jan. 21.—The lives of two non-combatants in the bitter fight between union miners and coal operators, a 17-year-old mother and her newly born baby, may pay for the vengeance of alleged union sympathizers on the Pittsburgh Coal Company at Hackett, near here, on Friday morning.

Mrs. Ruth Black, wife of a non-union miner, and her baby are the victims. She lived with her husband, Elmer Black, 26, in the bleak row of frame houses said to have been set afire to drive out the young couple; a 73-year-old Negro miner and another Negro family.

The young mother was found lying on a bed of rags on the floor of a tottering frame shack almost 12 hours after the stork's visit which had been hastened by the excitement. The shack houses John Proctor, his wife and four children, the Negro family which lived a short distance from Black's home.

Black told state police his wife awakened him about midnight Thursday when she discovered two houses in the row aflame. He barely had time to carry his girl wife to safety when his own home caught fire. An alarm was sent to Finleyville, about a half mile away, but Fire Chief Robert A. Patton says he was seriously ill and unable to answer the summons. He told the telephone operator to notify the first engineer of the volunteer fire company.

The Finleyville fire-fighters demurred. They had been threatened with bodily harm at Hackett in November. Sergeant Reese Davis of the state police detachment at Library was called. An appeal was sent to Monongahela for firemen. Sergeant Davis and his detachment of four men arrived at the scene ahead of the Monongahela fire truck and found that planks had been removed from a small wooden bridge leading to the fire.

Three houses were burned to the ground. Two of them were unoccupied. The house next to Black's home was occupied by Moses Watkins, the aged Negro miner. He offered to shelter Black and his young wife, but the Proctor home

SCIENCE AND INVENTION -:- COME TO AID -:- OF LIFE GAMBLING MINERS

HOODED

One of the many types of masks used in industrial work described by Dr. S. H. Katz, chemist in charge of the Gas Mask Laboratory of the United States Bureau of Mines, Pittsburgh, before the Pittsburgh section of the American Chemical Society.

MINER'S PILOT

The safety lamp supplies a twofold purpose. It burns so long as there is 16 or more per cent of oxygen in the air. When the flame goes out the miner retreats if he carries the type of gas mask shown in the picture. This mask is but a filter, obtaining its oxygen from the air and removing the poisonous fumes. Methane gas also is detected by the safety lamp.

RELIEF COMING!

These rescue men are fully equipped with oxygen-breathing apparatus for entering mines containing the deadliest fumes. The safety lamps are carried to detect methane gas. This type of mask, described by Dr. Katz last night, is used in all mine rescue work and sometimes must be worn by all persons entering gas-filled mines for weeks after an explosion or fire.

SELF-RESCUER

One-half hour's breathing is offered by these small "self-rescuers" which have already saved more than 20 lives in the Pittsburgh district.

Conan Doyle Engaged to Write Sequel to "The Lost World" for First National to Put on Screen

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS,
Motion Picture Editor of Universal Service

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 21.

CONAN DOYLE, whose wandering in the spirit world was temporarily halted while he wrote "The Lost World" for Watterson Rothacker, has been engaged to write a sequel. The dinosaur, ichthyosaur, and the other huge mammals whose strength was sufficient to turn over huge buildings, will again be featured in a drama very much like "The Lost World."

Mr. Rothacker's first excursion into the realms of the prehistoric age was an experiment. He didn't know how modern movie patrons would react to Conan Doyle's somewhat mad idea. He soon learned that "The Lost World" was a sold-out proposition wherever it was shown.

The tricks of photography amazed even those who are familiar with the wizardry of the camera.

The latest monthly check of the Exhibitors Herald reports "The Lost World" second only to "Ben Hur" in sales for 1927. For three years it has been doing a record business. Small wonder Mr. Rothacker feels Flint Nattuns could stand a sequel.

The next foreign travelers to depart from Hollywood are Marshall Neilan, Blanche Sweet and Betty Bronson. All three leave us on Tuesday to sail on the Olympic for Europe. For Mickey and Blanche it is a business trip. They will go direct to England where Mr. Neilan will direct Gertrude Lawrence, the musical comedy favorite, and Miss Sweet may or may not make a picture. She is a great favorite in England and it does not seem likely the English companies will let her depart without at least appearing in one film. For little Miss Bronson it is a holiday and a pleasure trip. No one need talk movies to her. She is going direct to gay Paree, where she is going to try her brand of French on the natives. They tell me she has learned to speak French very well. Mickey and Blanche will chaperone the young traveler who, for the first time in her 18 years, is making a long trip without her mother.

While the Warner Studios have been quiet and inactive, Vitaphone has continued doing business. Little sketches have been prepared and produced with Vitaphone presentation. Lloyd Bacon, who is like his father in being able to write as well as direct, is about to begin a one-act sketch from his own pen called "The New Chief of Police." Audrey Ferris, Wampas star, and Landers Stevens will be featured. It will be interesting to watch and see what happens to these 13 girls chosen by the members of the Wampas as the most promising screen material for 1928. Some of them will probably be a credit to their sponsors and others will pass out of the pictures. That's what always happens.

They are expecting Famous Funnyon out at Universal City. He is supposed to supervise the filming of "The Genius," his original story. Whether or not Mr. Funnyon will listen to Edward Montagne and remain on the set while his story is in the process of production is another matter. He may talk over his story, give his opinion and visit Universal City, but somehow I just can't see him parked there for any length of time.

Vilma Banky and Ronald Colman have appeared in five pictures together without a single accident. But yesterday the jinx was with them. Mr. Colman was supposed to carry Miss Banky in his arms on horseback across a muddy, wet street. The horse slipped and Mr. Colman and his fair burden were deposited in the mud somewhat bruised and shocked, but otherwise all right. This is their last appearance together. "Leatherface," will see the separation of the Banky-Colman team. "Leatherface," by the by, becomes "The Passionate Adventure," or perhaps something else. We never know in the picture business when a change of title is waiting for us.

One of those busy rumors that starts somewhere and gets nowhere has enveloped Vera Reynolds for the past few weeks. After Miss Reynolds stepped out of the cast of "Walking Back," because it was essentially a man's picture, there was talk that she had decided to leave the De Mille Company. She herself denies that rumor in no uncertain fashion. "I have several months more on my contract and a year's option," she explained, "and I am not leaving the De Mille Studio until I am told my services are no longer wanted." Meanwhile, the petite red-haired Reynolds child is preparing to make "The Heart of Katie," and wishing people would let her alone. But if they did, she could be sure she was no longer of interest to the fickle public.

Mary Miles Minter is back in Los Angeles. I don't believe many people know that she has returned from Europe. She was supposed to have made a picture abroad but apparently the negotiations, started before she sailed, were never completed. Those who have had a glimpse of Mary report that she is no thinner than when she left these shores. It is a pity too, for she is still young and she still has her share of good looks.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random. Emil Jannings ordering frankfurters and sauerkraut at a studio restaurant; Richard Dix getting his shoes shined and matching Wallace Beery to see who pays Oscar, the affable bootblack; Joan Crawford and young Douglas Fairbanks driving up Hollywood boulevard too slowly to be traveling anywhere in particular; Clara Bow trying not to let her temper get the best of her after she smashed the fender of her new Cadillac car. That's all, thank you.

Louis Graveure, formerly a favorite baritone, gave a most disappointing song recital in Carnegie Music Hall last evening. In a style that flowed like cold molasses he sang some 20 songs; they were like great-grandmother's samplers, each had a different motto but they looked all alike. They were mostly stale offerings; the program might have interested a ladies' club in the Middle West.

It is hard to imagine what Greveure is attempting with his voice. It is lighter, more like a tenor than ever; he sings directly with open tone, scoops with unforgivable frequency, and exaggerates every phrase far beyond the extent of any artistic reason. We wish he might return and sing as he used to sing.

Chopin Preludes Are on Organ Program

Three preludes by Chopin, No. 4 in E Minor, No. 6 in B Minor, and No 21 in B Flat Major, are included on the program for the free organ recital to be given by Dr. Charles Heinroth at 8:15 o'clock tonight in Carnegie Music Hall. The 25 Preludes by Chopin are not, as the name might indicate, an introduction to something to follow. Each one, no matter how small or brief is complete in itself. Most of the Preludes were written on the Island of Majorca in the Mediterranean.

The program for tonight is: Overture to "Oberon", Weber; Hora Mystica and Hora Gandiosa, Bonet; "None but the Weary Heart", Tchaikovsky; Choral in A Minor, Franck; Three preludes, Chopin; Symphony in G Minor, No. 6, Widor.

The program for the organ recital at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon includes Overture to "Hienzi", Wagner; Meditation from "Thais", Massenet; Scherzo from Sonata No. 5, Guilmant; Five Spanish Dances, Moszkowski; Liebestraum (Dream of Love) in A Flat, Liszt; Fantasy in F Minor, Monart; Evening Bells and Cradle Song, Macfarlane; Grand Choeur Dialogue, Gigout.

ADMITS HE WED OTHER'S WIFE

George Gearhart, 20, 2138 Lytle street, pleading to a misdemeanor involving the uncommon charge of "knowingly marrying the wife of another," offered as his defense in Criminal Court that he thought the remarriage of his "wife's" husband automatically severed that tie.

Mrs. Helen Crozier, alias Smith, the wife in dispute, was married to Wilson Crozier, who married again in California recently without the formality of a divorce, it was stated, and Gearhart on January 12 was married to her by the Rev. R. L. Smith of 12 Mansion street. It was charged and admitted. The woman, who is charged with bigamy, roomed at 1715 Howard street, coming here from Cleveland, where she roomed with Mrs. A. L. Weaver, the prosecutor in the case. Gearhart was committed to the workhouse for 6 to 12 months.

Walker, president of the state society.

U. S. POLICY SUCCESS

there has been as yet no serious effort to get down to the "issues" before the conference, which embrace everything from international hygiene to international intervention.

The social side of the conference, with its nightly dinners, its daily luncheons, its drives and informal conversation has been all-important in preparing the grounds for the real business of the gathering. And it is in these activities, rather than in the few frock-coated formal sessions, that the smooth oil of diplomacy has been most active and efficacious.

It is now considered exceedingly doubtful if the conference will be asked to write a definition of "intervention." Dr. Gustavo Guerrero, Foreign Minister of Salvador and one of the cities of United States policy in the Carribean countries, who had been expected to raise the question, has been put into a quasi-judicial position by his election to the chairmanship of the Public International Law Committee. He may, and probably will decide now that his position makes it indelicate for him to stress the issue. Most of the important and larger delegations, including Argentine and Brazil will be averse to it, too.

LINDY TO HELP

One of the really important things that the conference may accept here is the more rapid promotion of communication between the United States and the 20 neighboring republics on the South—by, rail, motor and air.

Ambitious projects are on foot to link the countries of the Americas closer together with motor roads, railroads and air routes. The conference began the serious consideration of promotional means today with the first meeting of the committee of communications.

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh will lend impetus to this movement, by his arrival in Havana. When he reaches here, Col. Lindbergh will have completed a tour of all the states of Central America. He has flown over jungles, volcanoes, swamps and mountains with nothing to guide him except a few maps and his sense of direction. And he has determined, that a comprehensive aerial service between these countries is feasible—and a good deal cheaper, too, than road penetration.

The American delegation is planning to use Lindbergh's visit to its fullest diplomatic extent. Already it is planned to have a plenary session of the conference after his arrival, at which the "Caballero de Aire," as they call him in Cuba, will address the Congress.

BORN AS MINE HOME BURNS

had a carpet on the floor, Black says, and he accepted the Proctor family's hospitality.

A bed was thrown together with the only available coverings, a bunch of rags.

During the night, the young wife's condition became worse and the early morning brought a visitor that had not been expected until the spring—a boy baby. There was only Mrs. Proctor to administer to the suffering girl-wife and the father hurried out to summon Dr. Emmett Davis of Library.

Dr. Davis answered the call, but the young mother and baby were left in the tottering shack. Last night, however, Washington county authorities were notified of the woman's condition and sh was taken to the Monongahela Hospital.

ART MANAGER, 20 YRS., QUITS

Mrs. George H. Wilson, who for 20 years has been manager of the Art Society, has resigned, it was announced last night by Charles Heinroth, president of the organization. Miss May Beegle, local concert manager, is to be the new manager, President Heinroth said.

The society was founded in 1873 and it has brought to Pittsburgh many distinguished artists. Mrs. Wilson, accepting the position of manager, succeeded her husband, George H. Wilson. She has been made an honorary member of the society for life.

Will to Guard Ireland's Head from Heflin

KEY WEST, Fla., Jan. 21.—Talking about visiting presidents and welcomes, don't forget our guest, the President of Ireland. He is a great fellow, and if his welcome here is as cordial as his country gives to Americans, his tour will be triumphal. Show him a good time, Jimmy Walker. I'll keep Heflin off.

Yours,
WILL ROGERS.

KEN LOEFFLER, star of the Pittsburgh Morrys, last year's Central Professional League champions and this year a member of the McKeesport Cyclers, has decided to try his skill as a referee and will be available to teams hiring members of the West Penn Association.

In accepting the application of Loeffler, the West Penn Association obtains a veteran student of the popular indoor sport who should have no difficulty making the grade as a first-class arbiter.

Loeffler has had years of experience as a basketball player and he is well qualified to referee games in this vicinity. Loeffler first gained prominence as a basketball star while a member of the Penn State varsity quintet. After graduating Loeffler played for five years with the Pittsburgh Morrys and when that team disbanded he cast his allegiance with the McKeesport Cyclers, a quintet that is composed virtually of the same members of last year's Morrys.

Loeffler does not intend to abandon active competition entirely and will play with the McKeesport Cyclers every Saturday night.

THE Ritz Club, kept in the background all season through their inability to find teams willing to give it a date on their schedules, last night proved its right to be rated with the leading light first-class quintets operating in this vicinity when it defeated the crack Goldenson on the South Side Market House floor by five points, 28 to 23.

The colored passers from Center Avenue Y. M. C. A. proved themselves capable basketball players who know how to handle themselves on the floor, and they are going to demand recognition before the light first-class championship is decided.

Handicapped in booking strong attractions due to the refusal of many of the local clubs to give them a date, the Ritz passers have met and defeated some strong teams so far this season.

This club is composed of passers who possess speed and know how to shoot. A team that plays clean basketball at all times, the Ritz club is deserving of being rated with the best clubs in its class this year.

Tonight the Center avenue quintet will be given a chance to add another victim to its record when it engages the Pittsburgh Railways passers of the Philadelphia Company League on the Center Avenue "Y" floor.

MEYER GOLDENSON, backer of the team bearing his name on the South Side, has arranged to stage a benefit game at the Market House next Friday night for the destitute miners.

No longer a member of the Y. A. O. League, Goldenson plans to send his quintet against a team composed of local stars next Friday night, the entire proceeds of the game to be donated to the miners fund.

The South Side management is making an effort to get one of the strong local leagues to send an all-star team to the Market House for the benefit game.

The Goldensons last night played a game with the Ritz club with the four-personal foul rule in effect and were convinced that this rule tends to eliminate roughness. Only 17 fouls were called on both teams by Heggs Snyder, veteran referee of the West Penn Association.

TWO attractive games are scheduled in the Allegheny County League race tonight, the Duquesne Lafayettes, champions of the first round, invading Butler to meet the Veterans of Foreign Wars, while the Enoch Rauh Club goes to Braddock to oppose the Braddock American Legion team.

That the Duquesne Lafayettes, last year's champions, will have a hard time repeating in the second round of this season's race, was proved when the Goose Goslins defeated them in the opening game at the South Side Market House.

The Butler team showed fine form in its initial County League start against the Rauh Club last Tuesday night and should extend the champions to the limit on the small Butler floor.

THE North Side Community House passers, who swamped the Hill Top Y. M. C. A. quintet on the latter's home floor Thursday night, will be out to add another strong team to their list of victims tonight when they engage the Young Men's Hebrew Association five on the Belle Field avenue court. Community House this season appears to have one of the best teams in its history. The Y. M. H. A. quintet, while not enjoying the success that marked its play last winter, nevertheless is flashing fine form in local amateur circles.

The game brings together two evenly matched clubs that should present an interesting contest.

QUALITY is the leading asset of today's soccer card, the two games scheduled being of such high caliber as to make amends for the schedule's lack of size.

The outstanding game naturally will be the battle at Lawrence Park, where for the first time in many moons the National Amateur champions from Heidelberg will show its wares in defense of its national title against the Pittsburgh Celtics.

Both teams have a great following and play a colorful brand of soccer, and with Heidelberg being in the national limelight it is considered probable that hundreds of Pittsburghers not acquainted with soccer will go down to the Strip to see America's greatest amateur soccer football team in action. And there is nothing one-sided about the game. Pittsburgh Celtics are having the best season of their career and will surely extend the Green and Gold Tornados.

Over on the North Side, at the Salt Works grounds, Chateau street, the Clan McPherson eleven will have its stiffest test of the season with Mustard Hollow, showing in Pittsburgh for the second time. Soccerites will see a real cup-fighting aggregation in that Sickles outfit, as it plays great cup tie football. The game will be a real test for both clubs. The contests will start promptly at 3 p. m.

Fans in the district will be keenly interested in the inter-state game at Cleveland tomorrow between Western Pennsylvania and Ohio selects. The Pittsburghers will leave over the P. & L. E. at 8:10 tomorrow morning, having a special coach attached to the Cleveland flyer.

Vice-President Hillen of the West Penn Football Association will be in charge of the Pittsburghers.

Bob Butland and Johnny MacEwen of the Ohio State body will meet the locals at Fifty-fifth street, Cleveland, and escort them to the grounds. The game is scheduled to start at 2 p. m. and will be over in plenty of time for the Pittsburghers to get the 6 p. m. train home.

Delaney Go Here Planned

JACK DELANEY, former light-heavyweight champion, may box in the main bout of the reopening show at Motor Square Garden on the night of Monday, February 6, Manager John Hernon declared today in denying press reports from New York that Delaney would meet Battling Levinsky, the former American champion, here next Friday night.

"The automobile show will be in the Garden next week," Hernon said, so that the date mentioned is impossible. However, Delaney has accepted terms to meet Levinsky here with a $5 top for ringside seats. Philadelphia is bidding for the same match and Levinsky is holding out to have it booked there because of the prospect of a much larger gate. We still hope to close the match."

The story from New York said that Delaney, who has boxed twice this week, stopping Sully Montgomery in one round Monday night and Jack Humbeck in six rounds last night, plans to box an average of once a week in his new heavyweight campaign. He has a match in view with Jack Renault at St. Louis and also will appear again in Chicago, where he recently knocked out Paul Berlenbach.

B. & O. BOWLERS HOLD TOURNEY HERE TODAY

The annual bowling tournament of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, eastern lines, will be held today at the Haus alleys on the North Side, with teams in the singles and doubles entered from various cities of the eastern lines.

Following the tournament tonight the visiting bowlers will be guests at a dinner-dance at the Hotel Chatham. Prominent baseball figures, including Bill McKechnie, manager of the St. Louis Cardinals; Honus Wagner, former Pirate shortstop, and Buck Herzog, one-time National League infielder, have accepted invitations to attend.

D. & E. TO BATTLE WESLEYAN FEB. 22

The contest will be the first of the season between the two teams. It was originally scheduled in Elkins February 21, but was moved up one day and will be played here.

GAMBLE TO DIRECT U. P. ALUMNI FIVE

NEW WILMINGTON, Pa., Jan. 21.—Hugh Gamble, captain of last year's Westminster College court team, has been given the privilege of selecting the alumni five which will play the varsity here tonight.

SMITH AND ARMOUR EL PASO FAVORITES

EL PASO, Tex., Jan. 21.—(AP.)—Two score professional golfers were assigned to threesomes here today for the opening of the second annual El Paso open.

MacDonald Smith of Great Neck, L. I., and Tommy Armour of Washington, national open titleholder and defending champion, were among the favorites. Smith's backers pointed to the record 134, seven under par, which he made in a practice round on the difficult country club course. While Armour has not equaled this mark in practice this week, he has turned in cards in the lower seventies. He won last year's tournament with 288.

Pairings for the 36 holes today found Smith asigned to play with Billie Burke of New York and Joe Laliy, local professional. Armour drew Willie Hunter of Los Angeles and Joe Turnesa of New York. Another threesome expected to attract a large gallery was comprised of Bobby Cruickshank, New York; Frank Walsh, Appleton, Wis., and Leonard Schmutte, Lima, O.

The schedule called for 18 holes this morning and the same number this afternoon, with a similar program tomorrow. Prize money totals $3,500.

PURDUE TO DEFEND BIG TEN LEAD TONIGHT

CHICAGO, Jan. 21.—(AP.)—Undefeated in the Western Conference, but having played only one game, the Purdue basketball team will play the Iowa University five tonight at Iowa City in what promises to be the feature event of tonight's Big Ten basketball program. The Boilermakers won their only Conference game from Illinois, 30 to 24, early in the season.

Two other games are to be played tonight. Illinois meets Indiana at Bloomington, while Chicago tangles with Ohio State at Columbus. In the Illinois-Indiana game, the Illini will be battling to get back to a .500 percentage, while the Hoosiers have championship aspirations, having lost but one game.

The annual mid-year lull sets in after tonight's games, there being only three games scheduled until a week from next Saturday.

GOOSE GOSLIN HOLDOUT

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—Outfielder Goose Goslin of the Washington Senators has been asked to take a substantial cut in salary next year and is opposed to signing a new contract on the terms suggested, it was reported today. President Clark Griffith of the Senators declined to discuss plans for a settlement.

YANKS ASK RAISE

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—(INS.)—Three members of the New York Yankees are reported to be suffering from holdouttis. Pitcher Waite Hoyt, heartened by the successful raids made upon Col. Jake Ruppert's wallet by Babe Ruth, Herb Pennock and Lou Gehrig, wants his salary increased to $20,000. Tony Lazzeri, on the coast, declared he would return his contract unsigned unless more money was forthcoming.

The Yankee officials are not particularly worried about the third holdout, Mike Gazella. Mike is merely a utility infielder.

Brooklyn Games Tonight Draw Stars

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—(INS.)—Leading athletes of Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and Washington will meet the cream of the metropolitan district in the Brooklyn College games at the Thirteenth Regiment Armory tonight. More than 500 individual athletes will appear in a program of 23 events, including 15 relays.

Lloyd B. Hahn, of Boston, America's premier middle distance runner, is favorite in the Brooklyn College thousand, feature event of the meet, although the stiffest kind of opposition is expected from Leo Larrisee, Chicago A. A., who won the event in 1926 from a great field that included Hahn, Joe Caraney, a dark horse from Georgetown University, and others.

EL PASO OPEN STARTS TODAY

EL PASO, Tex., Jan. 21.—(AP.)—Stars of the golfing firmament will tee off in the second annual $3,500 El Paso open over the tricky course of the El Paso Country Club today.

The barnstorming group of linksmen, most of whom will trek to San Antonio for the Texas open on February 3, showed the usual brand of good golf in the practice rounds yesterday but had no success in attempts to better the record-breaking 66 hung up yesterday by MacDonald Smith, Great Neck, L. I., professional. Smith's brilliant performance was seven strokes under par.

"Lighthorse Harry Cooper of Los Angeles was among the late arrivals for the tournament, which calls for 72 holes of medal play. Thirty-six holes will be played today and a like number Sunday. Tommy Armour, who stroked the course in 67 last year, is the defending title-holder. He won the 1927 El Paso open with an aggregate 288.

SPEAKING OF SPORTS

By HARRY KECK
SPORTS EDITOR

BELIEVE it or not, but one Charles A. Adams, vice president of the Boston Braves, is credited with having made the most refreshing crack in baseball in many years when he heard that his club had just obtained Rogers Hornsby in the much-mooted recent Trade of the Century.

"That's a great trade," Adams is said to have confided to Judge Emil Fuchs, president of the Braves. "Hornsby is a fine pitcher and he will be a big help to our staff."

Yes, Mr. Adams made his fortune in the grocery business and broke into sports via hockey.

PHILADELPHIA has a fistic problem all its own in the person of little Pete Nebo, an Indian featherweight imported from New York as a set-up for Benny Bass, familiarly known as the featherweight champion of the world. Pete showed no respect for Benny and made the fight so close that the judges disagreed and the referee had to save the home town pride by giving him a decision that was hooted down by the populace.

Well, now, there was nothing to do with Nebo after that exhibition but to bring him back, and the club matched him with Harry Blitman, another Philadelphia ace, for last Monday night. Harry has been specializing in one-round knockouts recently, among his victims being Al Corbett and Johnny Datto. They thought he'd take the doughty Nebo like Grant took that town down South, but again Nebo scrambled the onions by putting up a nifty fight and causing the judges to disagree, and a riot almost developed when the referee again found for his Philadelphia opponent.

Ten thousand fans jammed the Arena for that Blitman-Nebo fuss and 5,000 more on the outside clamored for admission, causing such a disturbance that the police

SIX points ahead at half time and out in front by 25 at the end of the game, the undefeated Pitt Panthers rang up their ninth consecutive victory of the season last night by whipping West Virginia's touted varsity 51-26 on the Stadium Pavilion court.

The victory, which was harder for the Panthers to secure and tie down than the score might indicate, gave the Carlsonmen the lead in the Big Four with two victories and no defeats, and also placed them in a tie with the Dukes, Grove City, Wash-Jeff and Waynesburg for the non-Conference lead.

West Virginia did just what was expected of them last evening, presenting a stubborn defense, during the first half, at least, and showing an offensive of enough power to worry the Panthers, until their own got started. But they did just what every other team has done this year, tried to beat Pitt to the punch, tried to outspeed them and tried to beat 'em at their own game—and suffered the same fate that was handed Michigan, Dartmouth, Ohio State, Tech, Syracuse and the rest of the teams Pitt has defeated. Too smart, too fast and too clever, the Panthers ran up 35 points in

SCHENLEY SET FOR FIFTH

The battle between Schenley High School and Fifth Avenue High, on the Pitt Stadium gym court tonight, should be one of the best of the season. Old rivals on the court, neither team has been defeated; the students are seething with excitement. It is just possible that the status of leader in Section 1 of the City League will be decided in a rather spectacular manner. The contest originally was carded for yesterday, but demand for admission caused the date and site to be changed.

Schenley's quint is in good condition. Balquist, Moore, Lewis, D. Moore and Loder will probably make up the starting lineup. For Fifth, Dugan, Harris, Freedle, Skeegan and Glick are primed to start.

The game will be called at 8:15 p. m.

Home Town Folks Fete Pitt Stars

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Jan. 21.—Gilbert Welch, all-America grid star of 1927, and his teammate, John Roberts, both of the Pitt football team, were given the greatest home town reception here today ever recorded in the history of Parkersburg.

They were met at the 1:56 train by a crowd estimated at 5,000 persons, which included city and school officials, representatives from the Board of Commerce and all civic organizations, three bands and hundreds of students.

As they alighted from the train, wearing broad smiles of greeting, the two football heroes were escorted by Victor Mealy of the reception committee between two lines of policemen to awaiting automobile.

Gibby Welch

The blare of bands and loud cheering featured the parade from the train to the auditorium of the Parkersburg High School, a mile away. State policemen barred crowds from the school campus and building in order to give the paraders entrance.

The auditorium, which seats 1,500, was soon filled to overflowing.

Mayor Walter E. Stout gave a short address of welcome, which was followed by responses from the honored youths. H. E. Rodgers, superintendent of schools, was the next speaker and was followed by Rev. Gilt Robb Wilson of Trenton, N. J., national chaplain of the American Legion and a former resident of Parkersburg.

The program for the evening consists of a banquet at the Parkersburg High School Gymnasium. Chaplain Wilson is the principal speaker. Athletic officials from va-

CHILLY SAUCE

By CHILLY DOYLE

BASEBALL of 20 years ago had many stars the mention of whose names cause pleasant sensations. Standing out among the heroes who were just starting when the horseless carriage brought confusion, was Mike Donlin, picturesque outfielder who moved from the diamond to the stage and then to the movies.

LESS than one year ago, Donlin's health broke down as he pursued his tasks at Hollywood. It was reported he was suffering from cancer. In any event he was in very bad shape. Friends prevailed upon him to leave Hollywood to visit the Mayo Brothers at Rochester, Minn. Mike consented, and now he is in the flush of health.

IN discussing Donlin, a writer in the Los Angeles Times states that Mike is back on the job and going strong since his visit with the Minnesota specialists. Donlin is playing the role of a gangster in a big melo-dramatic comedy now being filmed.

DONLIN'S friends and admirers were scattered all over the National League circuit. Mike was exceptionally aggressive, but his sense of humor was just as keen as his fighting spirit and as a result he was able to solve situations that would harass others.

AS a youth Donlin allowed himself to get into one or two little brawls. He was sent to jail after one of these fights, but later in life he became a very good citizen just as he is now. After doing a trick in jail, Mike, of course, had to stand for some kidding from the bleachers. Many a player would have rankled under the same stuff. One type of athlete would have fought back in such a manner as to antagonize the hecklers, but Donlin was too wise for this.

A CERTAIN group of bleacherites thought it was cute to sing the "rogues' march" as Donlin walked to and from his outfield position. Did this get Mike "down?" Not that you could notice. Facing

A badly cut left eye made it necessary to halt the contest. Delaney opened a gaping wound in one of the preceding rounds. The left jabs and right hooks that Delaney scored on the cut eyelid brought blood from the wound in a rapid flow and it deluged the face.

The Dollar Question in Marriage

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

THERE are two sides to every question. It may well be added that there are as many sides to the marriage question as there are to a highly-polished diamond. And not least important is its dollar side.

The sentimental side of marriage is much stressed nowadays—and rightly so. Yet many authorities of note hold that both suitability and the financial side are more important to the happiness and success of marriage than is mutual love at the outset, claiming that love will naturally follow, when these important underlying questions are satisfactorily settled.

It is undeniably true that no matter how much in love you may be, you cannot afford to ignore the dollars and cents of marriage.

"I married Jim when he had exactly two hundred dollars in the bank," laughed a lovely lady I know. Literally, this is true. And their marriage proved one of pure romance and enduring happiness.

Yet the lady was not as reckless as might seem on the surface, as I happen to know. For Jim, although he had at the moment of his marriage, but little capital in dollars and cents, had a beautiful and cultivated voice and had just begun his first season as singer of leading roles at the greatest opera house in the world. So capacity to earn in this case, together with character and responsibility, took care satisfactorily of the dollar side of marriage.

IF YOU happen to be a lady with a "crepe-de-chine soul," like the heroine of the recent novel—I hope you are not—it is a serious question whether you will be content with love in a cottage or tiny flat. If the man who cares for you can offer only a very moderate income, and you have very extravagant tastes, has such a marriage a chance? Is love going to compensate for drudgery and poverty? Or will you prove afresh in your experience that too often when poverty flies in at the window love flies out the door? These questions are practical. On their sensible solution may depend the success of your marriage.

Poverty is not an ogre. For a couple who are healthy, young, ambitious, willing to work and in love with each other it is fun to tackle this problem of making one dollar stretch into five. For both know that with thrift, good sense and the mutual inspiration of their affection they can win success from failure itself.

THE girl who, disregarding love, chooses a marriage of wealth as the "easiest way" may well find it the hardest way. Helen made this mistake. She tolerated Frank, she loved Steve. Frank was rich, Steve poor. Why marry Steve, reasoned Helen, only to go on struggling with poverty? She might better continue to pound her typewriter at $30 a week.

So Helen sent back the fraternity pin and the tiny solitaire engagement ring, which had cost Steve a real sacrifice. She married Frank.

Ten years have passed since then. Today Steve is head of a huge corporation. His sheer ability and hard work won the backing of capitalists, who offered to found a great manufacturing plant on the condition that he would head their company. Steve is a rich man, and will be still more rich.

Two years after Helen broke with him, Steve married a wise, sensible, pretty girl, who found it just as much fun to cook and scrub and mend and keep house for him in those early days of financial struggle as it is today to enjoy luxurious comfort and the prospect of a second honeymoon abroad next summer with her "dearest."

AS FOR Helen, the man she married lost his wealth, and with it his health, several years ago. Helen is game. She is working hard today as nurse and home-maker for an elderly husband she does not love.

Think long and think well before you marry for money. For wealth is often here today, gone tomorrow. Besides, does even money make up for constant boring companionship? And the gruelling experiences of divorce and alimony courts are deadening to the very soul.

It sometimes happens that a big-hearted girl of romantic tendencies is attracted to a man just because he is poor and seemingly needs her help. She mistakes her pity for love. And while pity may be akin to love, it is a poor basis for marriage.

Because love is precious and altogether satisfying and lovely, is it not wise to give it the chance to fold its wings and make its home at your hearth by pondering well and planning practically the dollar side of marriage?

A LITTLE GHOST AND THE FLAPPERETTES

DRAWN BY NELL BRINKLEY

WILL the pretty flapperette of today, when she is the gran'mother of tomorrow, look back, when she has arrived at a certain age, and sigh and say to the other grandmothers around her—with their old-fashioned short hair, my! my!—"Heavens! I don't know what to make of the girls nowadays. They're no more LIKE the girls in our day! No romance, no modesty, and FRESH! I guess I'm an old stick-in-the-mud, Fifi, but I liked it best when you and I were girls. Somehow or other girls seemed so FEMININE then!"

Will they? Those who are taking the youth of today pretty hard will shout, "Will they! You mean, CAN they?"

It is possible. And VERY probable, for each generation has repeated itself like that. Let the most modern-minded man reach a certain age, and no matter how sturdily he has rooted for, and how well he has understood the girl-type of today up to then, all of a sudden right before your eyes he will develop a piteous case of nostalgia for the girl and the woman he knew when he was young. It can't be helped or dammed up, that tide of homesickness for the girls that were that overtakes those who were young with them. No matter how faulty their manners, nor how homely their dress. The manners of a man's youth look the kindest and the best to him; and the homely dress—modest and quaint.

Thinking of our backward-turning minds, I wondered what it would be like to one of those little maids of another time if she could come forward, a bright little ghost, to a modern scene, and witness the freedom of our girls and their needs!

Myself, I think she would wish to live another life—right now.

The girl-girl would envy the boy-girl. And buy herself a short skirt straight off!

But—though the writer is a bulwark of defense for the beauty and the freedom of the flapperette, she must have just touched that certain age we were speaking of—for she cannot help but think the little ghost with the muff was a more fetching, feminine figure than the girl-boy she watches with delighted eyes.

Busybody Mothers Don't Help

By L. LAMAR MATTHEWS

HENRY is out of a job. The firm for which he has worked since he left school closed its doors recently and that left Henry without employment.

Of course, his mother is worried about the matter—not only because Henry needs his weekly salary, but because he is so miserable when he is idle. He comes home at night with that beaten, sullen look in his eyes that jobless men bring home. His mother knows by his expression that he has not met with success, but she wants to hear all about it.

"Any luck, Son?"

Henry shakes his head and goes on to his room. She follows him there.

"Did you see So-and-So?" "What did he say?" "Why didn't you tell him this and that?" "Whom else did you see?" "Well, why didn't you go to see the man your Uncle Will told you about?"

Questions like these are prompted by her concern for the boy's welfare. But they irritate him. If they did any good a little irritation would not make so much difference. But the questioning doesn't help him at all.

Henry is a grown young man, but his mother still wants to steer his affairs toward a successful climax. Henry doesn't care for climaxes, and being a man, he prefers to do his own steering.

There is another thing that Henry's mother tries to arrange for her son.

She is anxious for him to meet the right sort of girls. So every now and then she says:

"Son, I met a lovely girl today. She is pretty and bright, and I know you would like her. I told her that I wanted you to know each other, and she said she would be delighted."

Henry immediately conceives an unreasonable indifference toward that girl. He has never seen her; he never wants to see her. Occasionally his mother contrives an introduction; but Henry is prejudiced against the girl before he meets her. And nobody could induce him to like her—least of all his mother.

Henry is a clean-cut, good-natured young fellow who loves and admires his mother; but, like other young people, he is possessed of a subconscious perverseness.

Grown sons and daughters abominate insistence, and parents might as well recognize that fact. It is quite often the case that a suggestion from an advice-giving relative sets the youngster against the idea.

Girls and boys who work for their living have a great many problems. Sometimes parents can help them; usually they cannot. When they really need your advice they will let the fact be known.

It is very distressing to be set aside by your children; but thrusting comments upon them never gets satisfactory results. Parents who adopt a method that arouses opposition in their children are to be pitied. It takes tact and judgment and friendliness and tolerance to live harmoniously with grown-up children.

Evening Neckwear

"All set" for a swell evening—the evening sets of lame, cloth of gold, or silvered metallic fabric consist of hat, collarette and purse to match. The hat is of toque or turban type, the bag either pouch or envelope, and the collar a combination of fur banding and the fabric as the hat. This small, snugly-fitting bit of neckwear closes at the side back, being fastened under a single flower or a cluster of buds.

For Chest Beauty

By MARIA JERITZA,
Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Company, One of the Most Beautiful Women of the Day.

NUMEROUS inquiries reach me regarding the best means of reducing the contour of the chest and bust to slender symmetry. Too often this inquiry is a veiled way of asking how to achieve a "boyish" silhouette and flat chest, which some women seem to mistake for the line of beauty. So I may as well explain from the outset that I do not believe in drastic measures for reducing natural curves to unnatural straightness.

The lovely curves of bust and chest must be retained if perfect bodily symmetry is to be achieved.

There never was a greater fallacy than the idea that tightly compressing the bust will reduce its size. All that is accomplished by this tight binding is to weaken muscles from firmness to ugly flabbiness, and ultimately increase rather than decrease their size. Moreover, there is grave danger, when an extremely tight brassiere is worn, that glands of the neck as well as of the bust may be injured.

Beauty is not won in a day except when some great illumination of soul, some profound unselfish emotion may transform a woman almost instantly to an expression of spiritual beauty. But for the most part we win loveliness slowly, surely, through wise thinking and living and sensible, systematic care of the body.

All exercises that develop the chest are excellent also as a means of firming and slenderizing the muscles of the bust. Deep breathing—systematic deep breathing, taken before your open window the first thing in the morning and the last thing at night—will possibly help you more than any one exercise to achieve lovely lines of neck, throat, shoulders, chest and bust.

The following simple breathing exercise is as good as any for this purpose:

Stand erect with your back and neck straight, your weight balanced over the balls of your feet, your toes pointed forward, your arms at your sides. Raise your arms sideways, slowly, to shoulder level and as you do so inhale deeply until you can expand your lungs no farther. Then lower your arms to first position while you exhale slowly. Repeat the exercise four times, gradually working up to ten.

All shoulder and upper-arm exercises, as well as chest exercises, tend to symmetrical chest and bust development. Swimming, rowing a boat, canoeing, tennis and hanging a washing on a high line are equally good exercises for this purpose.

After your deep breathing, exercises and bath in the morning, be sure to sponge your chest with cold water to firm the muscles, for cold water is an astringent. If you wish to reduce your bust, guard against rich, fattening foods. If you would like to increase its size, drink an abundance of milk with the cream left in.

Wear a brassiere of soft silk, not too tight for comfort. A rubber garment worn only when exercising may induce perspiration and so aid reduction.

The contour of the shoulders, bust and chest should be very lovely, and you can cultivate this natural beauty by simple, sensible measures.

If Eyes Are Inflamed Get Expert Attention

A READER who has written a charming letter of appreciation asks for an article about inflammation of the eyes. Of course it is a pleasure to prepare it.

DR. COPELAND

If you ever had a badly inflamed eye, you can understand why everybody who suffers this way is more than anxious to get rid of the trouble. The pain of an iritis, one of the forms of eye inflammation, is excruciating. Of course there are types of eye disturbance which are not painful, but they are the exceptions.

The exposed part of the eyeball, what we commonly call the "white of the eye," is covered with a thin membrane known as the "conjuctiva." This is reflected upon the inner side of the eyelids and becomes their lining.

The conjuctiva in health is a transparent tissue, filled with blood vessels—but so thin and delicate that they are hardly seen. But if you get a cinder in the eye, or expose it to irritating dust or fumes, the conjuctiva becomes very red. The little vessels are filled with blood and the eye is said to be "inflamed."

There are some classical symptoms of inflammation, symptoms which for ages have been used to describe inflammation. Redness, swelling, heat and pain—these are the signs of real inflammation.

If there is really an inflammation of the conjuctiva, it will be found that the eyeball and lid lining are red and swollen and the eye feels hot and uncomfortable, even if not actually painful. This is a condition the doctors call conjunctivitis.

There are many types and forms of conjunctivitis. It may be a simple catarrhal inflammation. Exposure to the wind, over-reading, eye-strain, or some simple infection, may be responsible.

There are more serious kinds of conjunctivitis. Granulated eyelids or trachoma, is a disease we greatly dread. Fortunately, it is not at all common these days.

The colored part of the eye, covered over by the cornea, is the "iris." This may be blue or gray, black or brown. It gives distinction and beauty to the eye.

The iris is really a thin curtain. Its purpose is to control the amount of light entering the eye through the "pupil."

You may have regarded the black pupil as a patch on the iris. In reality it is a hole in the iris.

You know how a cat's eye gets big or little, according to the light. Our eyes act the same way. The iris expands or contracts, regulating the size of the pupil.

The chief parts of the iris are the muscles and the many blood vessels in its structure. A tissue like this is liable to become inflamed and so we find iritis one of the common inflammatory diseases of the eye.

In a bad attack, the iris looks muddy. The lustre is gone. There will be observed a zone of deep redness in the white of the eye, entirely surrounding the cornea.

The pain is much worse at night and in damp weather. This makes you think of rheumatism. As a matter of fact we sometimes speak of "rheumatic iritis." It is produced by the same causes that excite rheumatism. Exposure, pus infection somewhere—in teeth, tonsils or elsewhere—and a run-down state of health, may be responsible for the attack.

Eye inflammations are too serious to be neglected. They require expert medical attention.

Answers to Health Queries

A. M. M. Q.—Would it be all right to marry my mother's cousin? Are there laws against such marriages in the state of Minnesota?

A.—This would be a marriage between second cousins and the relationship should be far enough removed under the circumstances. I doubt it.

J. G. Q.—What causes itching all over the body; also constant perspiring?

A.—This condition may be due to pruritis, or a gall-bladder condition, auto-intoxication or diabetes. Have urine analyzed to determine the exact cause and follow your doctor's advice in regard to treatment.

C. O. Q.—What are the symptoms of tumor of the brain and can this trouble be cured?

A.—Headaches, dizziness, disturbances of vision are among the symptoms, although these do not necessarily indicate this trouble. Have a careful examination to determine just what is causing the trouble and then definite treatment can be advised.

SCHOOL POISONING HELD PLOT

At Kelly Field for Advanced Training and Wings

A "Good-Sport" Instructor Overlooks "Lindy's" Merry Offending in the Air

Rapid progress is made by the cadets that prove apt at Brooks Field, Col. Lindbergh told yesterday in the Sun-Telegraph. In that chapter of "We" he described the "three-sixty" and "one-eighty" tests, and the acrobatics required in which the cadet learned to loop, spin, roll and perform other tricks of flying. This and the ground work was very exacting, which may account for some of the humorous pranks of the boys in barracks. They were a carefree lot and made use for fun of whatever came their way—even polecats. But when they finished their course they were aviators.

Near "Washout" That Passed

CHAPTER XIV.

IN SEPTEMBER, 1924, we transferred to Kelly. The time we had looked forward to for half a year had arrived. We were through the period of just learning how to fly and were entering a new experience—that of learning how to make use of our flying ability in actual service. We would no longer be floating around the airdrome in machines whose only purpose was to stand up under the hard knocks of inexperienced pilots; but we were going to fly planes which had an actual military value in warfare.

We were old cadets and felt the importance of our experience. We were no longer treated as rookies but as potential officers. Before leaving Brooks we had conformed with cadet traditions and allowed groups of our new class to gather around us while we gravely spoke of examinations, check pilots, "Benzine Boards" and "washouts." We thoroughly enjoyed the awe inspired by our 75 hours of flying experience.

At Kelly our difficulties set in with renewed vigor. The De Havilands did not maneuver like the training Jennies, and we were required to fly as we had never flown before. If a cadet was not able to handle his ship in a maneuver which was at least equal to the standard, he was usually heading toward home within a week.

We were allowed a few days to become accustomed to flying the new type of plane, then an instructor would go up with us to see if our progress had been satisfactory. If so, we were sent to the next stage; if not, we went up with a check pilot.

From landings we went to the "eight" stage, where were assigned two landmarks such as a tree and a haystack several hundred feet apart, and required to do figure eights around them. Then came the spot-landing stage, when we throttled our engine at about a thousand feet and were required to land in a large white circle without using our motor. On this stage we were graded on our take-off, climb, approach, landing, roll, distance from mark and method of handling the ship. In fact at Kelly we were constantly under observation and our only chance of relaxation while flying was when the sky was cloudy and we could get above the clouds.

On one occasion we were flying with a low ceiling and the visibility was not very good. In fact it was an ideal day to do the things we were not supposed to. I was hedge-hopping along over the country when I saw another D. H. playing around on my right. I flew over, and after chasing each other around for a while we proceeded to do chandelles, vertical banks, wing-overs, and everything else we could think of; all within a few feet of the ground as the clouds themselves were only about 200 feet high. At last I decided to go up close to the other plane for a little low formation flying, but as I approached I saw that there were two men in the ship and that I had been breaking every rule ever established about low flying with an instructor watching me from another ship. I left that locality with wide-open motor and for several days expected to be called on the carpet before the commanding officer on a washout offense. That instructor must have been a good sport, however, because I never heard from him and never was able to find out who he was.

"Lindy" Saved "Washout"

On another occasion, near the end of my course, I came very near being washed out for something I knew nothing about. I had been practicing landings in an S.E.-5 on one corner of Kelly Field. When my time had expired, I landed on the pursuit stage, taxied up to the line and turned the ship over to the mechanics. That afternoon I was called from class and ordered to report to the operations officer; whereupon he informed me that my flying days were over and that as I knew why, there was no use in explaining further. I was then ordered to report back to my studies.

It came out of a clear sky. I knew of a number of offenses I had committed, but none of them at that time. I had actually no idea of what the operations officer was talking about.

When school was over I returned to the operations hut and requested an account of the alleged offense. It appeared that the propeller on my S. E.-5 was cracked and the spreader board broken on the landing gear, and as there was no corn growing on Kelly Field, that was a sure sign that I had landed away from the airdrome without reporting the fact. A washout offense. We drove to the pursuit stage and found conditions exactly as stated, except that the cornstalks turned out to be weeds, and it was decided that the damage had been caused by a stake left standing in the corner of Kelly Field where I had been landing, although I had not felt the ship strike anything. The cadet who flew the plane earlier in the morning was using the same part of the field and said that he felt it strike a bump on one of his take-offs, but did not believe any damage had been done. Who was flying the ship made little difference, however, because as long as he had not landed away from the airdrome without authority, the slight damage was of no consequence. I had come very close to the "Benzine Board" for an offense of which I knew nothing, but it was probably only the open-mindedness and sense of fair play of the operations officer that kept me from being washed out as a result.

(Hurdles in landing practice, cross-country flying and gunnery as taught at Kelly Field are the subjects treated by Col. Lindbergh tomorrow in an absorbing chapter of "WE."

QUIZ STUDENTS IN POISON PROBE

TOLEDO, Jan. 21.—(AP.)—A Waite High School instructor and seven students today were recovering from serious illness while Principal James A. Pollock and two detectives continued to investigate substitution of a deadly poison for a harmless ingredient in the initiation rites of a school society.

Clarence C. Coontz, 28, science teacher, most seriously ill, was reported by hospital officials to be improving. Two of the students were recovering in another hospital and the other five in their homes.

Pollock and Detectives Eaton and Brown questioned more than 40 students who attended the initiation party of the Alchemists Club. An examination of the chemical laboratory disclosed the substitution of the poison for a harmless but ill-tasting chemical.

Miss Lulu Howard, chemistry instructor, who prepared the chemicals, said the poison was not on the table shortly before the initiation. She said it probably was placed there after her attention was attracted elsewhere.

THERE is an interesting story in what Joe Mackrell is doing. He is, as you know, register of wills of Allegheny county. He began studying law at 40 or thereabouts and this is his last year of law school. He will take the state bar examinations in June.

Achieving a legal education at any age strikes the layman as one of the hardest of tasks—tackling such a job at 40 or thereabouts is something noteworthy.

Joe was a veteran reporter of the city before he went into politics. One of his pet stories, told quite a while ago, and recalled here now, is how he covered a murder story in Pittsburgh. He arrived with the police. The killing had occurred during a poker game. The victim was still sitting at the table when the police arrived. Five cards were in his stilled hand. The hand of cards consisted of—well under such circumstances what two pair would be in the dead man's hand? You guessed it—aces and eights.

THE marriage license bureau comes under Joe's direction. He is advocating more privacy in the matter of taking out applications to wed.*

At the present time the couples sit in a large room and answer the many questions of the clerks. Couples, anyway, are naturally embarrassed as they make ready to take the long count and Joe would relieve them of some of this embarrassment by affording them more privacy. While our interest in the matter is just academic, the idea here seems sound.

Staley Drummond Gives Lily His Check to Pay Her Bill

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

LILLY LEXINGTON, spoiled daughter of the CYRUS LEXINGTONS, is engaged to marry STALEY DRUMMOND, a rich bachelor much older than herself. She is fond of him, but realizes she does not really love him the day after she accepts him, when she becomes instantly and violently infatuated with a taxicab driver whom she sees down town when she goes to meet her chum, SUE CAIN. Forgetting all about Sue, she jumps into his cab and he drives her home. She learns that his name is PAT FRANCE and that he owns his own cab in a company headed by his friend, ROY JETTERSON. He tells her that he is going to sell it to finance a piston ring that he has invented, and he and his cab vanish from the streets. Lily misses him terribly, and decides she cares too much for him to marry Staley Drummond. But Mrs. Lexington announces the engagement, and the date of the wedding is set for June tenth. Then, on May tenth, Mrs. Lexington hires a new chauffeur, and it is Pat France. Lily tells her mother how much she cares for Pat, and Mrs. Lexington humiliates him so that he leaves the house. Lily leaves with him, and the next day she marries him. She quarrels with his mother and they take a little flat by themselves. Lily refuses to get his breakfast, so he goes to a nearby lunchroom for it. Lily created considerable of a scene in the restaurant. Finally, Pat accompanied her home and told her she must trust him, and that, in the future, she must take better care of the home. Lily tried, and their domestic ship sailed smoother for a few months. One day Lily met SUE CAIN, an old friend, on the street. Sue invited her to a card party. Lily, without funds, went to a store and tried to charge some clothes to her father. She was informed her mother had left word that "Mrs. Patrick France could not charge things to Mr. Lexington."

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

THE idea that Staley might still be in love with her was curiously exciting to Lily. It stuck in her mind all the way home that night. . . . She stood in the crowded street car, hanging to a strap and jostled by the homeward-bound crowds of working people, and said to herself: "One of the richest men in this town is in love with me—and here I am without the price of a taxicab. Here I am, hanging to a strap, like a cashgirl, in a 5-and-10-cent store!"

She was full of bitterness. . . . Without knowing what she was doing, Sue had stirred up a lot of mischief that afternoon by her careless remarks about Staley Drummond!

There was no light in the windows of the little flat when Lily turned into Derbyshire street at a quarter before six that night.

"Thank fortune!" She breathed a sigh of pure relief. . . . If Pat had been at home how on earth would she have explained the fur-and-velvet coat to him? The golden brown hat? The chiffon dress with its embroidery of little gold leaves?

"To say nothing of the Blue Star perfume bottle that I left on the dresser," she went on thinking. For Blue Star perfume cost $15 an ounce, and Pat would have known that Lily never could have bought it for herself.

As she went up the front walk, searching in her new golden-brown bag for her latch key a man stepped out from the vestibule of the apartment building.

"Mrs. Patrick France?" he asked, and Lily answered "Yes" without thinking.

"I'd like a word with you," he said and stepped into the brightly-lighted hall with her. His eyes went down over the coat, and in an instant Lily knew what had happened. . . . The Angouleme Shop had sent the store detective for the clothes, or for the money they represented. . . .

"Do you mind if I ask you about the clothes you're wearing?" the man said, and Lily airily answered:

"Oh, no, go right ahead!—what is it you want to know about them?"

"There seems to have been a misunderstanding about them," he told her in a smooth even tone. "The young lady at the credit desk says that she distinctly told you you could not charge the clothes to Mr. Cyrus Lexington—"

"But he's my own father!" said Lily. "And I've always bought things at Angouleme's—although I never shall again. You come with me, and I'll telephone my father—"

She had just one thought uppermost in her mind . . . She must get this man away from the front hall before Pat came!

We tried to get Mr. Lexington this afternoon on the telephone, and his office says he is out of town," the man objected. "My instructions are to see Mr. France—"

Lily's heart seemed to turn completely over.

"Well, we'll go and telephone him then!" she said. "He's not coming home to dinner—" That was a lie, she knew, but lies came easily to Lily. Not malicious, wicked lies, but the small white variety. She never thought of them as lies, anyway.

She thought of them as—inspirations, always!

The nearest telephone was one in the little restaurant on Boyle street. The store detective from Angouleme's sat on a high white stool and chewed gum while Lily looked up Staley Drummond's telephone number in the book. . . .

She gave it to Central in a voice that trembled—his office number. He answered the telephone himself.

"Hello," she said to him, "do you know who this is?"

There was a tiny pause. "Yes, I know," Staley answered. "You don't suppose I could ever forget your voice, child, do you?"

CHAPTER XXXIV.

"STALEY, I'm in a whole peck of trouble," Lily said to him, in her lovely, velvety voice, "and you're the only person I know who can help me out—"

She paused and waited for that to sink in before she went on about the money she wanted from him. . . . It seemed so heartless and cold, somehow, to call him up after four months, only to tell him that all she wanted from him was money.

"You were the first person I thought of Staley," she went on, "when this thing happened."

"What thing?" he asked. "What in the dickens has gone wrong, Lily?"

"Well, I bought some clothes today at Angouleme's," she began her sordid little tale. "And they wouldn't let me charge them to my father, as I always had—and I wanted them, Staley. So I just walked out with them naturally."

At this point Staley gave a low, long-drawn whistle that could be plainly heard through the telephone. "Whew!—you mean you stole them?" he asked, and Lily winced at the ugly word.

"Why, no—they had no right to refuse me the clothes!" she answered. "I've bought all my clothes there for years. . . . Well, anyway, they sent their credit man or their store detective, or somebody, out to see me and get the money from my—my husband. I'm telephoning you from a restaurant near by home, and the man is with me, Staley. If you have any money, won't you please come out here and give it to him so he'll go away and leave me in peace?—I'm so afraid he'll go to my husband."

Dead silence for a minute. Then Staley's voice again:

"How much do you owe, Lily?"

She did not know. She simply had wanted the clothes, said she would take them, and charged them to her father. The only thing she was sure of was the price of the $15 Blue Star perfume.

She opened the door of the telephone booth and spoke to the man from Angouleme's. "How much do I owe you?" she asked him.

He pulled some slips of paper from his pocket and looked at them.

"Three hundred and thirty dollars."

Lily repeated the figure to Staley. "It's quite a lot—$330," she answered. "My father is out of town or he would pay it, of course. And I'll see that he does when he comes back home—I couldn't let you do this for me otherwise—"

"Where are you now?" Staley cut in upon her. "Tell me how to get there?"

Lily told him, and he hung up the receiver at his end of the wire. Then she went out into the glare and steam of the little white-tiled restaurant and waited for the sound of Staley's car.

"My husband will be here very soon," she told the man from Angouleme's, with a cold stare, and a tone that put him in his place.

It was almost half an hour later that Staley's car—the familiar blue roadster—came tearing up Boyle street, and stopped before the restaurant. The man from Angouleme's jumped up from the stool, where he had been sitting, and started for the door with Lily. But she stopped him.

"I'll see my husband alone, and I'll bring you your money, never fear!" she snapped at him. "You just stay here where you are!"

He stayed. And she went out alone to meet Staley Drummond.

It was hard to face him, she found. She kept thinking of the night in the France family's house, when he had gone completely to pieces because she was lifting him for Pat France. . . . She kept remembering the night when he had given her her engagement ring and held her in his arms and kissed her. . . .

And something in his face told her that he was remembering those things, too. . . . After all, they had been very close friends as well as sweethearts for a long time, the two of them. They would always be bound, more or less, by those memories.

He climbed over the side of the long, low automobile and stood beside her on the pavement. "I didn't have very much money at the office," he said to her, "so I wrote out a check for the amount—and made it payable to the Angouleme shop. Is that all right?"

Lily said she supposed it was. . . . She disliked the idea of letting the shop people know who had paid her bill.

But what else could she do but take it and turn it over to the man who was watching her from within the restaurant?

"And thanks, Staley," she said. "I'll give this to him, and then I'll come back here to you. We might go for a run—just 10 minutes, or so?"

She knew that he wanted her to suggest that—and she felt that she ought to be a little nice to him when he was doing her this great favor.

Inside the shop she noticed that he had written across the top of the check "In full payment of Mrs. Pat France's bill."

Well, that was only business-like, she supposed. . . . But she did hate the thought of the Angouleme people seeing it and knowing that a man who was not her husband was paying for her clothes.

"Of course, nobody would believe that I'm going to make dad pay it all back to Staley," she thought. "Everybody would think that I was just a horrid little gold-digger, borrowing money from my friends to pay my clothes bills!"

The man from Angouleme's gave her an amused glance when she handed him the check. "I thought you said your husband would pay the bill," he said, pointing with a stubby finger to Staley's well-known signature at the bottom of the check.

Lily had the grace to blush. She hated to be caught in a lie.

"There's your check!" she said to him, with a glance like forked lightning. "And please receipt that bill you showed me! That's all you have to do!"

She tore it out of his fingers when he handed it to her, shot him another look full of dislike and fury, and ran out to Staley once more.

"Well, here I am—a free woman at last!" she said to him, as he helped her into his deep-cushioned car, and tucked a light wool robe around her knees. . . . Oh, it was pleasant to be looked after like this, after months of doing things for Pat. Cooking for him, washing for him, ironing for him, cleaning for him.

"I suppose he's home right now, wondering why I'm not there to get his supper," she thought, bitterly. "Waiting to be waited on."

The big car started off down Boyle street, with its rough cobblestones, as if it were skimming over smooth asphalt. "Oh, Staley, I'd forgotten what it was like to be in a machine like this!" Lily sighed, looking up at him "It's wonderful!"

The moon had risen—a big, yellow moon—over the low housetops and roofs of the street, and by its light she could see Staley smile at her. "Oh, well," he said, "if you're happy, you don't mind riding in a cheap car, do you?"

Love's Embers

Absorbing Sequel to "Revelations of a Wife" — By Adele Garrison

Madge Prepares to Entertain the Great Philip Veritzen at the Farm.

I HAD no time for investigation of Eleanor Lincoln or consideration of the problem she presented in the days immediately following my return from my conference with Philip Veritzen. When I told my mother-in-law that Lillian and Marion were expected to arrive upon the coming Saturday, she immediately inaugurated one of the whirlwind sessions of housecleaning with which she precedes any prospective arrival of guests at the house. With Katie, harassed but as interested as herself, dutifully following in her wake, she went through the house as might the captain of a clipper, making sure that no speck of dust, no luckless finger marks were in evidence.

Prudently, I omitted to mention that Philip Veritzen was escorting Lillian and Marion in his own luxurious car and that the primary dictates of hospitality demanded that we offer him dinner with the other travelers when he arrived. But I put a secret word of warning in Katie's ear when, one day while my mother-in-law was busy upstairs, I sat down with my little maid to plan the welcoming first meal for the travelers.

"I want the very nicest dinner you ever cooked, Katie," I began, hating myself for the hesitation which followed my declaration.

Katie cast a quick, shrewd glance at me.

"Who coming so special?" she asked. "You nefer make fuss before ven Missis Underwood she coom. We always feex bang-up dinner, but you always say she shoost vun of family. Ve not make her feel like company."

I was furious that I could not control the flush which I felt creeping over my cheeks and back of my ears.

"I know, Katie," I said, lamely enough. "That is very true. But this time she hasn't been at the farm for so long, and, besides, Miss Marion is coming, and she's been away at school, and you know, while the food is good—"

"It's noddings to brag to policemans about," Katie interrupted with superb scorn. "But I know vot Marion vant. She vant potato soup, roast lamb mit mint sauce, scalloped potatoes, green peas mit lots of cream, dot combination salad of tomatoes and cucumbers, and strawberry shortcake mit whipped cream."

Mentally, I counted the calories and shuddered at the result; I also had a horrifying mental vision of Philip Veritzen's reaction were his fastidious appetite to be confronted with this hungry school girl's ideal of a good dinner. Then I squared my shoulders with a sudden determination to put the great producer out of my plans. We would have the dinner which was Marion's favorite and which I knew her healthy young appetite was already anticipating. If Philip Veritzen craved more sophisticated fare he would have to go elsechere for it.

"T' t is exactly the dinner I want, Katie," I said cheerfully. "That is, all except the cucumbers in the salad. I certainly cannot be responsible for including those in the menu with all those other dishes with cream in them."

"Dey not hurt Marion," Katie said with conviction. "She and dot Mary, dey uld eat nails."

"Nevertheless, we will omit the cucumbers," I said firmly. "And I want you to prepare enough food so that if Mrs. Underwood should happen to bring another guest or two with her we will have enough of everything."

I caught another quick, observing glance from Katie's keen eyes.

"I suppos, you want very best china und silver und linen, too, not so?" she queried.

For the Lovelorn -:- By ELEANOR GALE

Correspondents are reminded that all letters sent to this department must be written on one side of the paper only, and that no personal replies are ever given.

One Who Knows

DEAR MISS GALE:

A letter in your column appealed to me and I am going to answer it. "Lonesome and Heartbroken," I can appreciate your loneliness because I have experienced it too. Too true, you say one cannot be happy without friendships. I have always been popular among girls and had many happy friendships. I was blessed with the gift of sociability and never lacked for friends. I mingled with various crowds and studied the different personalities, constantly meeting new people. Girls sought me out and seemed glad of my company. Then one day I met a new girl. She had "it," as we say. She attracted me at once. Her vivaciousness, her naive frankness held me bought. A colorful friendship began to grow between us. It lasted a year, one perfect year. Then I woke up with a shock. For all about me parties, clubs, gatherings were going on—without me. I had broken off all other friendships, other associations, for her. So I was dropped, I finally thought reluctantly, admitted to myself the danger of my past actions. Slowly but surely my old friends had deserted me. Why should they not? I preferred one girl's friendship to many, was obviously delighted to be alone with her. At last, I severed the ties of our ideal friendship. I am still heartsore, for I still love her. But I will never form one personal friendship again. Once more, I am asked a lot, once more I am sought by former friends. And nobody knows that under my gaiety is hidden a well of real sorrow—sorrow for a friendship lost. This letter seems so cold as counts the heartache and loneliness I felt after the breakup and loneliness I felt after I parted from my really true friend. It cannot tell of the heartbreaking time I had trying to resume former friendships. But if you warn you girls—you girls who do not mix with the crowd, you who desire only one perfect friendship. For in the end you have lost all your companions—and perhaps the perfect friend. "Lonesome and Heartbroken," I have studied the girl who is most popular. In every case it is the same type of girl. The girl who is active, modern, lively, cheerful and determined to likely always the leader of her crowd. For the exclusive like to follow, they like an unfeeling leader, they want the girl who can do something—the girl who does! Miss Gale, do you agree with me?

ONE WHO KNOWS.

Since you deliberately decided that the fleeting gaities of many parties and many acquaintances was worth more to you than the friendship of a real girl, then I cannot see why you are so unhappy. You chose the lesser thing, in my opinion, but only you can decide whether it was worth it or not.

"Disheartened"

DEAR MISS GALE:

Having read your column for several years, I now find that I have some questions to ask. I am old enough to know myself well enough to detect "puppy love" from "real love." I have found after a year's courtship with a girl that I am deeply in love with her. We being of different religious beliefs, a marriage would mean family disinheritance for me and her. I do not care for myself, but hate it for her. You see how I feel about it and now ask your opinion.

"DISHEARTENED."

There have been many happy marriages between two people of different religious beliefs, and if you and this girl are sure of your love, I see no reason why you, too, shouldn't make a success of it. Real love is too precious and too rare to be lightly discarded because of "disinheritance." Your families, I am sure, would accept it as others have done, when they see it is inevitable. No one but yourselves, though, can weigh the matter.

A Bossed-Around Gal

DEAR MISS GALE:

I'm coming for advice. Every morning I get up at 5:30 to do my work and put everything in order till 8 o'clock; then I go to school and I come back at 4 again. My mother is always "bossing" me around from the time I get up until I go to bed about 7:30 at night. I don't know what I do that she's always "bossing" me around. I do everything that is to be done and do it right. I do all the washing before I go to school and then at nights and mornings from 4 to 8 I am always working the rest of the week and then she starts to bellow at me and bellows until she gets tired saying the same thing over again. My father, who is a very nice father to us, tries to stop it, but he can't. He is always sick and my mother thinks she'll just do the bossing. I am 16 and can't have no fun. My friends at school all like me and often some of them ask me to come to their house, but all on account of my mother I can't. I'm just like being caged in. I'm ashamed of myself already, Miss Gale, and I hate to go through the town because they are always pointing to me, but I never did anything to be blamed for. I often cry when I think of this. I'm crying now, so please give me advice. My mother just stopped raving around.

A BOSSED-AROUND GAL.

It isn't fair, certainly, for you to do all the housework as well as go to school. Talk it over with your mother when she is not angry with you, and make her understand that you cannot do it all.

Lonesome Girl

DEAR MISS GALE:

"Love." I have often wondered if there is such a thing. I doubt it. I hear girls talk about "Love." I am 18 and kind of good looking, yet I don't think about fellows all the time. I am an orphan and have never had a parent's love and I never go out with girls or fellows. Therefore, I am really lonesome. I do not believe in petting, drinking or smoking. Can you tell me how to find some real enjoyment for a lonesome girl to do by herself.

LONESOME GIRL.

There isn't much fun to be had in this life all by yourself, my dear. Make some friends among the girls by being friendly, and you will find life much sweeter. Don't expect those friendships to come to you without any effort on your part. Exert yourself to be all that you would like a friend to be.

Boots

DEAR MISS GALE:

Have been reading your column for a good while and would like to have some advice. I am 18 years of age and am considered good looking. I have been going steady with a fellow since last February. I care for him very much, but I have met another fellow whom I like very well. I want to go around with both of them, but the other fellow will not go with me unless I go steady with him. So I hope you can tell me what is best to do.

BOOTS.

Unless you are engaged to this first boy, he has no right to tell you not to go out with others. If you like them both so well, then you are not in love with either, you know.

Anxious

DEAR MISS GALE:

I have been reading your column for some time and have used advice you gave to others. Here is my problem: I am very much in love with a young man two years older than myself. We are both Syrians. Three years ago this young man kept company with an American girl, whom he loved very much. She loved him, but for some reason she started to go with another boy. My friend has told me many times that he loved her, but says that he will never go back to her because she double-crossed him once. She and I are chums and I know she would give anything to have him back. He has told me he loves me, and I think he does, but still I'm sure there is a place in his heart for the other girl. Should I try to persuade him to go back to her or should I continue to go with him? Our friends expect us to marry, but I feel that this girl is standing between us. We have planned to marry when I am 24 years old. I am now 22 and he is 24. I feel very young and don't want to settle down to a house yet. I love this boy very much. Please advise me. I am very puzzled over it. Wishing you success and luck, I am,

ANXIOUS.

My advice is to wait, as you have decided to do, until you are 24 years old, and the matter will have adjusted itself by that time. There is no need in your sacrificing yourself now so that this boy will return to the other girl, since he doesn't seem to want to do so very badly.

Undecided

DEAR MISS GALE:

I have no parents to turn to and I am asking you for advice. I am a girl 19 years of age, and I go with a young man of 25. I have been going with him for six months. He tells me he loves me, but I cannot believe it. He does not live near me, but comes to see me every now and then. He says no matter how much he is interested in me he won't show it in company. That makes me feel uneasy, as that convinces me he does not care for me. But when he is alone with me he shows me he cares. Do you think he cares for me at all? He speaks to me of marriage. He drinks a little, has not any work at present. Do you think I could accept him as my future mate? His people don't seem to approve of me and try to keep him away. But he says he doesn't care what his people think, he cares for me. Hoping to get your advice soon.

UNDECIDED.

Few men care to show outsiders how much they care for their wives or sweethearts, my dear. However, it doesn't seem to me that he is a very good prospect for you, since he drinks and doesn't work. Give him time to make good before accepting him.

D. R. F.

DEAR MISS GALE:

I have been reading your column for quite a long time. You certainly give the most wonderful advice. If you will permit me to enter your column for some advice, here I am. I am a girl 16 years old, a brunette and am popular with the opposite sex. I don't drink nor smoke, but I certainly pet. There is a certain fellow in our neighborhood whom I would like to get acquainted with. A few girls whom he has gone out with told me all sorts of faults they found with him. They told me he was "fast" and all sorts of things. But, Miss Gale, don't you think it depends on what kind of a girl he is with? Please tell me how I could get acquainted with him.

D. R. F.

You are too young to be so much interested in boys, my dear. If he likes you he will take the initiative. I am sorry you think it is all right to pet.

Word From South Makes Stay-at-Homes Shiver

JUST to make us all shiver a little bit more in these wintry blasts comes word from the Daniel M. Clemsons, of "Highmont," Fifth avenue, that they are thoroughly enjoying the delightful warmth of a California midwinter. The Clemsons, you know, left just recently for Pasadena, where they go every year, and are settled at the Hotel Huntington. The former Christine Miller's singing has been one of the features of the concert programs at the hotel this season, as usual.

At the opposite side of the continent are Mrs. Simon Patterson, of Darlington road, and Mrs. Edward H. Jennings, Jr., of Howe street. They are spending a few days in New York, stopping at the Barclay.

Traveling down to Florida, we find that the Harper K. Beegles and their little son, Harper, Jr., have taken an apartment at Miami Beach and expect to remain there until spring. DORMONT CENTURY CLUB LEAVES BEATEN PATH

Leave it to the Dormont New Century Club to do something a bit out of the beaten path. Yesterday afternoon the literary department of the club had charge of the meeting, which it turned into round table discussions and embellished with some good music and a reading or two. There were five tables at which current events, the drama, novels, modern essays and short stories were discussed, respectively, and the marvel of it all was that, close as they were, no one group was interfered with by another. Mrs. Ross E. Tggart, literary chairman, presided at the drama table, where a number of the season's plays were interestingly discussed. Mrs. Henry Nuttal's table on novels took up "Sorrel and Son," "Black April" and "Jalna," while Mrs. E. E. Houghtelin and her group around the essay table had Frances Lester Warner's "Surprising the Family," Robert Haven Schauffler's "Mental Good Housekeeping" and a G. B. Roberts article as their meat. Time was found for both national and international current events at the table presided over by Mrs. J. R. Kibler, while at Mrs. C. B. Phills' table much was contributed concerning short stories. Mrs. J. T. Johnson gave the readings, and the music, excellently sung, was furnished by the choral from the Mt. Lebanon Woman's Club, a new feature of the club which is, as the director, Mrs. Lucille Miller Werner, put it, "only four rehearsals old." Mrs. J. B. Moore and Mrs. C. N. Haggart were the accompanists, and Mrs. W. H. Turner played a violin obligato for one number. The afternoon was closed with the tea hour.

The January meeting of the Twenty-first Ward League of Women Voters will be held on Monday evening in the Manchester Educational Center. The monthly meeting of the Dormont League will be held at the home of Mrs. Harry Clark, Grandin avenue, Wednesday afternoon. The subject to be discussed is the "Jury System," Mrs. Elizabeth B. Motz will be the speaker, and Mrs. W. R. Gardner and Mrs. E. L. Thomssen will give their experiences as jurors. Mrs. Earnest Marsh will present the program, while Mrs. W. E. Whitemore, Mrs. Robert Blouti, Mrs. W. G. Provost, and Mrs. L. G. Fishack will be in charge of the social hour.

On Wednesday afternoon a meeting will be held, under auspices of the Allegheny County League, in the American Region room, Swissvale, for the purpose of bringing the league before the women of this community. Mrs. R. Templeton Smith will preside and Mrs. George R. Wallace will speak on "Democracy." The Wilkinsburg League will hold its monthly meeting on Wednesday afternoon in the Penn-Lincoln Hotel. Mrs. A. H. Bowman will give a report on the cause and cure of war convention.

Mrs. W. D. James, of Hiland avenue, Ben Avon, will be hostess to the local league on Thursday afternoon when Mrs. R. Templeton Smith, Allegheny county chairman, will speak. The Bellevue League is to hold its monthly meeting on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. C. W. Wrenshall, Dawson avenue, and will hear Sidney Teller of the Irene Kaufmann Settlement. His subject is to be "The Four-sided and Fore-sighted Man and Community."

Dr. Ransom E. Somers presented his subject, "Volcanoes and Earthquakes," in a most interesting and entertaining manner before the College Club yesterday afternoon. Volcanoes and earthquakes were defined, their actions described and their causes given. There are 9,000 quakes every year, Dr. Somers stated, but only about 100 of these do any damage. The majority are so slight that they can be detected only by the most sensitive instruments. Speaking of the heat of lava, Dr. Somers says it reaches 2,000 to 4,000 degrees and the phenomena at Yellowstone Park are caused by the still heated lava of former overflowings.

Mrs. Charles H. Rugg will be hostess to the Home and Hospital Club of Bellevue on Tuesday in her home, Parkview apartments, Ralph avenue. Mrs. Rome Hutson will be assistant hostess. Luncheon at 1 o'clock will be followed by a short business meeting and social hour. The ways and means committee, consisting of Mrs. Edwin Langdon, Mrs. Samuel Parks, Mrs. Harry Parker, Mrs. George Mercroft and Mrs. F. M. Reed, has secured the high school auditorium for the nights of February 23 and 24 for the club's benefit "Minstrelette."

"The Value of Volunteers to a Community" will be discussed by Mrs. Helen Glenn Tyson at the open meeting of the Pittsburgh Section, National Council of Jewish Juniors, tomorrow afternoon at the Young Men and Women's Hebrew Association. The afternoon's program will be devoted to social service and the various chairmen of the social service committees of the Junior Council will outline their activities. Mrs. Laura Holland McDonald, of the Girl Scouts of Allegheny County, will explain scouting.

"Two Y's for Women—You and Youth," is the subject of a talk which Miss Hazel Altsman, of Fifth Avenue High School, will give Monday evening before the Sewickley "Y" Women's Association in the Y. M. C. A. The talk is sponsored by the educational committee of the association.

DEFENSE GROUP AIDS MAN HELD IN TRESPASS

The International Labor Defense Association, with offices in the McGeagh Building, rushed today to the defense of Adam Kapugi, a coal miner arrested at Purseglove, W. Va., on a charge of trespassing on the property of the Continental Coal Company, Cassville. Edgar H. Stewart, Morgantown attorney, was engaged to look after Kapugi's interests.

"While trespass is the nominal charge against Kapugi," said W. J. White, a steel puddler, who is serving as local secretary of the International Labor Defense Association, "the real reason for his arrest is that he is supposed to have been distributing anti-injunction literature, and the state police are determined to find the source of the literature."

AID MANY HERE

The addition of the Kapugi case makes more than thirty in this district, according to White, that are being defended by the International Labor Defense. Among those whom it is assisting are 21 miners arrested at Cheswick in connection with a Sacco-Vanzetti meeting dispersed by the state police. One of the police was killed by an unidentified person later in the day. The 21 miners are charged with rioting, inciting to riot, resisting an officer and unlawful assembly, and if convicted, according to White, are liable to from six to ten years' imprisonment. Attorney Alan Davis has been engaged to defend them. William M. Brown, Episcopal bishop deposed for heresy, has sent $75 for their defense.

The association is assisting four men at Donora, accused of sedition, whose case is to come up Tuesday; six at Farrell, facing a similar charge, and four at Woodlawn, who were convicted of sedition and sentenced to imprisonment for from two and one-half to five years, but have appealed. It is also aiding a defendant arrested here during the raids on "reds" directed by A. Mitchell Palmer, United States Attorney General under President Wilson, but who has not yet been brought to trial.

Judge James B. Drew in Common Pleas Court has ordered members of the board of directors of the Brunot Home for Young Businesswomen, Stockton avenue, to appear before him and explain why they dismissed Miss Mary Linz, 20, of 31 Rostock street, while she was serving on juries in the court.

Miss Linz, a maid and waitress, yesterday was notified that another girl had been hired in her place. Mrs. Esther Fisher, superintendent of the home, explained this that she could not find another girl to work for two weeks and was compelled to employ one permanently.

POSTAL RELIEF BILL FAVORED HERE

Announcement was made last night that the County Commissioners, at their meeting of December 5, had indorsed the Dale-Lehlbach bill, which provides optional retirement after 30 years service of postal employes, with annuities of $1,200 per year. The bill is being sponsored by the Joint Association of Postal Employes of Western Pennsylvania.

Other local organizations that have adopted resolutions favorable to the bill are Division No. 15, Ancient Order of Hibernians; Fifteenth Ward Republican Club, Loyal Orange Lodge No. 565, Steam and Operating Engineers, Local No. 95, Lodge No. 365, Knights of Pythias, and Local No. 52, International Machinists. According to James F. Gallagher, president of the Postal Workers Association, the bill further provides for salary deductions of 2½ per cent to help maintain the retirement and disability fund, out of which annuities are paid.

Hearings will be held on the measure by the Civil Service Committee of the House of Representatives, beginning January 31.

"We contend that the passage of this act will add greatly to the stability and efficiency of the service," Mr. Callagher said last night.

"It will deal out justice to loyal and faithful governmental employes who have given their best to the service and who are no longer able to keep up the pace."

ARRANGE SECOND MINERS' BENEFIT

Encouraged by the great success of the midnight show at the Davis Thursday night for the benefit of the destitute miners' wives and children, and stimulated by the statement of the clergymen's relief committee that the situation is rapidly becoming appalling and additional funds are urgently needed, the Theater Managers' Association of Pittsburgh has arranged for another midnight benefit entertainment, to be given at the Sheridan Square Theater next Thursday night.

In no respect will it be inferior to the Davis show, which packed the house with an enthusiastic audience, who not only paid $2,000 for their seats, but contributed $321 to a collection taken for the relief work.

The Sheridan Square show will begin at 11:30 o'clock, and it is expected that its 15 or more acts will establish a new record for high-class diversified entertainment.

Every important theater in Pittsburgh will be represented by its finest attractions. Through the courtesy of Manager John B. Reynolds of the Alvin, Walter Woolf and Gladys Baxter, with members of their company, will present an episode from the lilting musical show, "Countess Maritza." Through the courtesy of the same manager, Thurston, the Great Magician, appearing at the Pitt Theater, will present a group of illusions.

Manager Harry Brown will send practically his whole company from the Nixon, with Ethel Watters, the chocolate-hued star, and her associates in scenes from "Africanna."

The Harris Theater will be represented in the huge program by Walter Brower, "the Southern tale bearer;" by Harris and Vaughn, musical comedy entertainers, and by Barr and LaMarr in a frivol of song and dance.

The Sheridan Square will present "The Yachting Party," the Earl and Rial Revue, and O'Neill and Oliver, two of the sprightliest entertainers in the varieties.

Manager Charles E. Smith of the Davis will send the best features of his Keith-Albee vaudeville show, including Bob Hall, the impromptu rhymester, who will serve as master of ceremonies; Joe Rae and his California Nighthawks' Revue, and Sherry, Mattison and Anders Sisters, in "Dancers as You Like Them."

Headliners from Loew's and United Artists' Penn Theater, Loew's Aldine, the Million Dollar Grand, the Schenley and Liberty theaters will also contribute to the gayety of the entertainment.

Great interest is being manifested in the forthcoming performance, seats for which are now on sale at the Sheridan Square Theater. All seats are reserved at a uniform price of $1, and the entire proceeds will be devoted to the purchase of food, clothing and medicine for the destitute in the mining camps.

Many parties are forming for the show. There is eagerness to see "a ten-dollar show for a dollar," and at the same time help a worthwhile philanthropy. The Y. M. C. A. of East Liberty has reserved 10 rows of seats, and the popular East Liberty amateur baseball club, the Reds, have asked for three rows. Numerous smaller groups have also made reservations. But an abundance of good seats on the first floor and in the balcony are still available.

Forbes

One Stock Rises to Billion; Ford's Bad Luck; Politics.

—By B. C. FORBES—

BUSINESS conditions, taking one part of the country with another, appear to be showing some improvement since the year opened. There has been, too, some gain in confidence.

But this does not apply to the stock market. How the current high prices for many stocks have been maintained in face of the apprehension felt in high places is beyond my comprehension. Almost every influential financier I talked with admits, confidentially, that he looks for a sharp fall in stocks which have been favored by speculators.

But in the daily battle on the New York Stock Exchange the bulls have not been compelled to give much ground thus far. One hour, one day prices decline; the next hour the next day they recover part or all of the loss. The net change this month has been downward, but not at all sensationally so.

My guess is that one of these days, after an outburst of tremendous trading, quotations will fail to snap back.

THE railroads are placing encouraging orders for materials and equipment. Motor manufacturers are also increasing their steel purchases. Utility companies are launching very ambitious improvement and extension programs. The American Telephone Company is this year spending $38,000,000 on new long distance plant alone, a record sum.

PHILADELPHIA ranks close to Chicago in volume of bank clearings. And Boston follows closely. New England isn't nearly as dead as often represented. In my humble opinion, New England is now laying foundations for a progressive movement likely to attract nationwide attention.

"A BILLION DOLLARS" increase in brokers' loans during the last 12 months is a mere drop in the bucket," observed one highly successful Wall street man. "It isn't as much as the increase in the securities of one corporation alone during 1927. And when you figure the increase in the market value of all stocks, and also the billions of new securities that have been issued, the increase in loans, instead of being regarded as extraordinary, should be regarded as extraordinarily small."

The corporation he had in mind is General Motors. A statistician has figured out that on January 1, 1928, all of the General Motors securities had a market value of $730,000,000; that on January 1, 1927, their value was $1,450,000,000; and that on January 4 of this year their quoted vlue was $2,340,000,000, a gain in one year of $790,000,000, and in two years of $1,820,000,000.

My own information is that Federal Reserve authorities take quite a different view of loan expansion. But, after all, it is difference of opinion which makes a market.

WELL, the Washington politicians have lost little time in trying to raise a noise.

Senator LA Follette's attempt to order the Federal Reserve Board to cut down loans on securities is a specimen of the "statesmanship" which, apparently, the business world must expect. It would have been interesting had the young Senator been asked to suggest just how the Reserve Board could slash loans.

That roar of thunder which has been ringing in your ears doubtless has been the nationwide clamor to have every electric light and power company in the country probed by politicians!

SERIOUSLY, do you know of the slightest agitation for such a probe? What specific charges have been lodged to justify the sweeping action proposed by a handful of senators? courts rigidly rule against "fishing expeditions." Clearly that is what a few politicians are eager to conduct. We hear a lot about states' rights. Just what state utility commissions have petitioned the Senate for protection against iniquitous electric power companies?

Fortunately, political ballyhooing doesn't frighten as it once did. We are gradually emerging from being a nation of "economic illiterates."

At that, conditions throughout the country are not so invulnerably prosperous that political action calculated to cause disturbance should be lightly regarded. Our present prosperity isn't exactly fool-proof.

IT'S the way of the world. After the spectacularly triumphal introduction of his new car, Mr. Ford has run into a streak of bad luck. The discovery was made that the single system of brakes on the Ford car ruled it off the roads in various states. The result was that the company had to take immediate steps to remedy this defect. Even the cars already sent out will have to be supplied with an additional brake.

Then the Federal Court in Detroit has just awarded $867,174 damages against the Ford Motor Company "for unauthorized use of a rust-proof patent."

Meanwhile mass production of the new Ford is still quite a way off. That is one reason why other makers of low-priced cars are speeding up production. Ford, they state, will not be an important factor this spring or summer.

STOCKS HALTS, CONTINUE TO RISE

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—(AP.)—Resumption of the upward price movement in today's stock market was temporarily interrupted by a heavy wave of profit taking, but speculators for the advance quickly regained control. Extreme gains in many of the active issues ranged from ½ to 6 points, with public utilities, Motors and merchandising issues giving the best exhibitions of group strength.

Week-end market letters laid particular stress on the stiffening steel prices and the pick-up in mill operations in that industry. Less alarm was expressed over the credit situation, although it was widely recognized as an important influence on the future trend of prices.

Montana Power was again a market leader, soaring 6 points to a new high record at 122. R. H. Macy advanced 4 points to a new peak at 34 and Montgomery Ward also rallied 4 points above yesterday's final quotation. Adams Express, Brooklyn Edison and Hudson Motors were other outstanding strong points.

The closing was firm. Total sales approximated 1,000,000 shares.

United Engineering Is Firm in Tone

United Engineering and Carnegie Metals monopolized the early trading on the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange. The latter zig-zagged up and down around yesterday's prices, while United Engineering maintained a rather firm tone.

There has been accumulative buying in both issues, although one Pittsburgh house has been a conspicuous seller of the metal stock. There is a large interest in it, with higher prices predicted. A total of 1,100 shares changed hands the first 15 minutes after the gong sounded.

Few issues have been traded in the last few days. Generally speaking stocks have held firm, with owners apparently satisfied to keep their holdings in anticipation of higher prices and especially for the oil and gas shares.

Lone Star Gas was in demand, with prices for the issue higher. However, there was not much doing in the oil and gas shares. Arkansas Gas came out around recent quotations. Independent Brewing also maintained a firm tone. The general list closed strong.

PHILADELPHIA — The Philadelphia Stock Exchange is investigating transactions in William Cramp Ship and Engine Building Company shares as a result of the rapid advances and wide price fluctuations.

Wages Are Being Maintained.

While prices of commodities have been on the decline, and these commodities include steel and automobiles, which industries employ 1,000,000 or more men, wages have been maintained. In other words the consuming power of the wage earner is as great as ever, greater, in fact, as he has been able to buy things cheaper. In this connection, a banker holds that if wages are maintained, 1928 is going to be a good year in business, as increased consuming power is bound in time to restore prices and production to normal.

Marland New Deep Well.

LOS ANGELES—Marland Oil Company of California has discovered a new deep zone in the Alamitos Heights section of Seal Beach. The zone carries nearly 600 feet of well saturated oil sand which Marland engineers believe underlies the entire proven area of the field. This would go far to retrieve losses incurred by close drilling to shallow upper zones which were rapidly depleted. The new sand is designated as the McGrath zone, topped by Marland at 6,040 feet in its well No. 14 McGrath and Selover, which has 550 feet of almost solid oil, said to be the best looking sand yet found in the field. Total depth of the well is 6,608 feet. Marland has two wells in the zone.

Standard Gas Shareholders' Increase.

It is estimated that approximately 21,000 new shareholders were added to the subsidiary and affiliated utilities of Standard Gas and Electric Company through operation of the customer ownership plan of equity financing in 1927. Through the merger of Western States Gas and Electric Company and Coast Valleys Gas and Electric Company with Pacific Gas and Electric Company, a total of 9,700 customer shareholders of these companies must be deducted from the total for all companies in the Standard system. Therefore, a net gain of 11,300 shareholders may be added to the total of 100,000 estimated at the close of 1926, showing a total of nearly 112,000 customer shareholders at the close of 1927.

California Concerns Conserving Gas.

Los Angeles—At the recent meeting in San Francisco between oil executives and Gov. Young's gas conservation committee it was decided to appoint a general committee which would designate subcommittees throughout various California oil fields. These committees are to make a study of conditions where natural gas is escaping and report their conclusions and recommendations to the general committee. This is a measure to prevent waste of gas. E. W. Clark, president of Union Oil Company of California and head of American Petroleum Institute, has appointed following general committee: M. E. Lombardi, chairman, Standard of California; William Reinhardt, Shell Company; Chester W. Brown, Union Oil; R. D. Bush, State oil and gas supervisor; William Moeller, Midway Gas; W. L. McLaine, General Petroleum; John McKeen, Richfield; L. G. Kinz, Associated Oil; Dana Hogue, Pan American; Charles Dore, Superior Oil, and Paul Grimm, George F. Getty, Inc.

American Vitrified Products.

The American Vitrified Products Company reports for the year ended October 31, 1927, net profits of $272,954 after all charges. Sales for the fiscal year totaled $3,742,519. As of October 31 current assets were $1,911,701 and current liabilities $439,175.

Seminole Oil Figures.

Tulsa, Okla.—The Seminole area for 24 hours ended at 7 a. m. yesterday produced 336,744 barrels of crude oil, as against 334,999 barrels on Thursday.

Third Liberty Loan Bonds Exchanged.

Washington—More than $525,000,000 of third Liberty loan bonds, or nearly a quarter of the total outstanding on January 9, have been exchanged for new Treasury notes, Secretary Mellon announced. This assures the success of Mellon's offer, the Treasury having set a limit of $700,000,000 on the exchanges. Additional exchanges will be permitted up to the close of business Monday, when the offer expires. The notes pay 3¼ per cent interest. Two months extra interest is being paid on the bonds as a premium. Additional exchange offers are expected before the bonds mature September 15.

Lack of Interest in Bonds.

The lack of interest in the bond market at the present time has certainly created an unusual situation, as this period of the year is ordinarily the most active of the whole year. The flotation of new issues has proceeded in restricted volume ever since the first of the year and this is indeed remarkable, for investment dealers have always in the past held back their new offerings to take advantage of the enormous investment demand that has invariably prevailed in the month of January. There is apparently a very good demand for new offerings, but dealers are unable to offer any volume of securities that are sufficiently attractive to satisfy it. The strength in the listed market is still the dominant feature of that section of the bond market. The public offering in the near future of several new pieces of financing which are now under consideration, is of sufficient volume to relieve an otherwise dull situation.—E. A. Mason & Co.

Thomas is Made Partner.

Moore, Leonard & Lynch have made application to the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange to admit to partnership Harrison M. Thomas. The membership standing in the name of W. E. Hervey has been transferred contingent upon the election to membership of William F. McJunkin.

New Standard of California Subsidiary.

Los Angeles—Standard Oil Company of California has formed a new subsidiary, the Pasote Petroleum Company, which has acquired 125 acres of land two miles east of El Paso, Tex., upon which will be constructed a modern refinery with daily capacity of 10,000 barrels of crude.

Fewer Business Failures.

R. G. Dun Company reports 606 business failures last week, against 622 in previous week and 612 a year ago.

Steel Operating at 80 Per Cent.

Steel ingot production of U. S. Steel Corporation has reached 80 per cent of capacity, compared with 78 per cent on January 8 and 75 per cent on January 14, says the Daily Metal Trade.

DAMON RUNYON SAYS

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—The manly art of hoss racing presented a cruel little touch of drama at New Orleans Wednesday in the death of Black Gold, a winner of the Kentucky Derby and a horse with more human-interest background, so to speak, than any other steed that ever peeked through a bridle.

DAMON RUNYON

You know, a race horse occasionally develops as much personality as a human being. Most of them are regarded as mere racing machines, whose very names are soon forgotten; but now and then a horse comes galloping into the pages of turf history with a definite identity and real background.

Such a horse was Black Gold, now buried in the infields of the Fair Grounds track at New Orleans, more or less the victim of man's cruelty. Black Gold sustained a broken leg in a race and had to be shot. The horse had developed lameness in two previous races, but was driven on and on to its pathetic end.

PROBABLY if Black Gold could have talked it would have explained the situation to its owner or trainer, saying:

"See here, I've got bad pains in my leg, and it hurts like sixty when I run. I've won a lot of races for you in the past and brought you a lot of turf glory, and you ought to give my leg a chance to get better."

But a race horse cannot talk, which is a great pity for more reasons than the death of Black Gold. The limp, which was the only outward sign that the horse could give that it wasn't right, did not prove enough.

Black Gold had to die running, as you might say, to prove that it wasn't fit for racing, and the turfites mourn too late for a gallant equine figure. Had Black Gold stopped running in the middle of the race, or had refused to run at all, these same turfites would have said the horse had turned sulker and quitter, which is bitter condemnation for a race horse.

BLACK GOLD raced to greatest turf fame by taking the Golden Jubilee Kentucky Derby at Louisville in 1924, when it was the favorite in the betting and the hope of most of the big crowd that saw the race. But previous to the retirement of the horse in September, 1924, Black Gold won 18 out of 21 races and a total of $166,000 for the owner, Mrs. R. M. Hoots of Oklahoma.

There seems to have been no particular excuse for bringing the horse out of retirement this year. There should have been enough sentiment attached to the past triumph of Black Gold to permit it to browse in grassy fields the remainder of its days. It is a pity, now, that Black Gold didn't belong to some very wealthy man like Col. E. R. Bradley, who could have afforded a life of equine leisure to this Kentucky Derby winner as he has to his own Bubbling Over.

The romance of Black Gold goes back to its breeding. It was by Black Toney, out of a little quarter horse called Useit, owned by R. M. Hoots, of Oklahoma, who was ruled off the turf because he refused to give up Useit in a claiming race.

The name Black Gold comes from the term that oil men sometimes apply to the grimy gush from the earth that subsequently becomes a golden flood of money. Hoots' widow, an Oklahoma Indian, had Useit mated to Black Toney. Her husband had often boasted that the quarter horse would one day foal a great race horse, though he didn't live to see Black Gold.

Stanley Wolf, who was trying to bring Black Gold here to the races at New Orleans, appeared in that city with the little black colt three years ago, and Tom Erkins, a great trainer of 2-year-olds, who died a few months back, pronounced Black Gold a great horse. But Erkins also remarked before his death that Black Gold would never come back as a real race horse.

NO ONE paid much attention to the offspring of the Oklahoma quarter horse until he popped out winning in the Louisiana Derby in the spring of 1924 at New Orleans. He showed such promise that he became the favorite in the winter books, and went to the post in that role at Churchill Downs the following May, carrying a tremendous load of the public's money.

The obscurity of the horse's dam, the romance of the name of the ownership, and the sudden appearance of the little horse on the horizon of events, all combined to appeal to the popular imagination.

I doubt if there has ever been a greater outburst of joy than when Black Gold suddenly came from behind Brazado in the stretch in the Derby of 1924 to win by a nose from the fast-flying Chilhowee. Black Gold's share of the purse that year was $53,775. He ran the mile and a quarter in 2:05 1-5.

Yet, after all, Black Gold's sudden end somehow fits in with the unusual history of the little horse from the beginning. Black Gold was always what you might call a "story horse."

Some will say, perhaps, that it winds up the romance better to have the famous son of the obscure Oklahoma mare buried in the infield at the Fair Grounds than to be roaming a Kentucky pasture, with sons and daughters of such ineptness as to be a mere racing reproach to a great name, as is the case with Sunny an old race horse of a [illegible] Black Gold.

PITT

the second half and had the ball game safely stowed away before eight minutes of the period had passed.

It was the sensational basket-bagging of Sykes Reed and Charlie Hyatt, Chipper Charlie himself, who laughed his way through a rough, tough evening to lead all in scoring, that put Pitt so far ahead. Capt. Sykes rang up seven baskets in about a dozen minutes, while Hyatt was getting six. Reed made 'em from all possible angles and positions, and turned in three of his under-the-hoop specialties to thrill the 3,500 spectators in the stands.

HYATT STARS

West Virginia gave early evidence of having been pointed for Hyatt. They were on him every time he moved, and succeeded in checking the Panther star in the first period to the extent that he only bagged two field goals. In the second half, after being knocked out for a moment or two when he and Black came together in midair, Charlie simply ran wild. Even when he was thumped by Black, he made his basket, and after having his wind restored, stepped up and dropped two foul goals.

The action was centered in the middle 10 minutes of the second half, for it was during that time that Pitt carried the fight too and through West Virginia. The Mountaineer defense cracked badly, Black being caught with his hands tied and helpless to stop Reed or Hyatt under the hoop. Paul Zehfuss slipped to the side once to score and Les Cohen, who relieved him, stood coolly in the corner and sank one that did not touch the rim.

Gyp Wunderlich, playing back for the most part, directed the play of the team well and fed Capt. Reed and Hyatt passes so accurate and hot, that West Virginia was totally unable to break them down. He also intercepted about half the tosses started by the visitors.

In a hip and tuck preliminary, the West Virginia freshmen downed the Pitt yerrittage, 31-26, coming from behind in the second half after having been held even in the first to edge out the Pitt Cubs.

DEMPSEY

the Tunney jam in Chicago, Yesterday Leo received a letter from the Manassa Mauler instructing him to be ready to take charge of his camp when Jack comes here next month to begin preparing for that match.

In the letter Dempsey reiterated that he was fully satisfied with the way Flynn had handled him in both the Sharkey and Tunney fights and set the terms for the coming engagement with Tunney.

Flynn is to receive a flat sum for his services that will equal the amount paid him for taking charge of Dempsey's training in Chicago.

TEX IN MIAMI

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Jan. 21.—(AP)—Tex Rickard and Gene Tunney "already understand each other," and there is little prospect of an important announcement relative to the heavyweight title fight prospects for 1928, during the promoter's stay here, he declared last night.

the bleachers, Donlin took the part of director, swung all hands into unison and then marched in step to the supposedly aggravating number. After one or two encores, Mike was applauded and the razzing ceased.

THE idea of a Rose Young Memorial at the Polo Grounds has captured the fans of New York and other parts. Contributions are limited to $1 and apparently they have been pouring into the New York offices. Fresco Thompson is the first baseball player to contribute to the fund. In a letter accompanying his donation, Thompson says the lamented Rose a big tribute. Fresco thinks Young was the best outfielder he saw in the National League.

SPEAKING of SPORTS

had to be called upon to disperse them.

AND still Nebo isn't disposed of. So the promoters have signed Tony Canzoneri, who is to meet Bass for the featherweight title, as Nebo's next opponent on January 30, and are fearful that the same thing will happen all over again and hoping they don't get more customers than they can accommodate. If Canzoneri fails to beat Pete decisively, Gene Tunney probably will be the Indian featherweight's next opponent. Philadelphia just simply must rid itself of him. He's not only too hard to beat, but he's too popular for the promoters' own good. A peculiar guy.

It's a good bet that if one were to suggest Nebo, who has little more than a local reputation in the East, as a principal in a main bout here the fans would get up and yell about it, demanding, in clarion tones, to know "Who'd he ever lick?"

If he keeps on fighting in Philly, where the best he can get is a split verdict, he'll probably never lick anybody, at least so far as the records are concerned. But he'll find it profitable.

OPEN tennis tournaments are to be with us. The United States Lawn Tennis Association, unable to stop the desertion of star amateurs into the professional ranks, is going to relent before it is forced to do so and sanction open tournaments in which the amateurs and pros will vie, the same as in golf. The action is a complete about-face by the U. S. L. T. A. authorities, but it had to come.

THERE are more ways than one to "take" a Scotchman. For instance, Willie Davies boxed Ernie Peters in Chicago last Monday night and the publicity in the Chicago papers had the little Welshman from Charleroi dubbed a Scotchman. It's surprising how many countrymen follow the exploits of their own people in the various branches of sport and turn out when they are on the bills.

Willie had a good night against Peters and cleaned up, winning many commendatory press notices the next day, and there probably are a lot of Scotchmen who saw the show who are going about with their chests stuck out and landing him to the skies, not so much because he is a good fighter as because he is supposed to be a good and true son of the bonnie land. As we said before, there are more ways than one to "take" even the wary clan.

Both Welch and Roberts received their early athletic training in the public schools of Parkersburg. Welch is the first Parkersburg boy to have been honored by all-America selection.

NEW CASTLE HONORS FOX

NEW CASTLE, Jan. 21.—Two hundred reservations have been made for the testimonial banquet to be held at the Castleton Hotel here tonight in honor of Alex Fox, captain-elect of the 1928 Pitt eleven. The principal speaker will be Charles Doyle of the Sun-Telegraph, Pittsburgh. Karl Davis, Charles Bowser and Alex Stevenson will be among the out-of-town guests. DeGraff Pearson will be toastmaster.

Alex Fox

In addition to many of the Pitt alumni prominent citizens will be among the 200 to attend the dinner.

Fox was a star at New Castle High, playing tackle in 1924 and entered Pitt in 1925. During the banquet the next captain, who played guard for Pitt last season, will be presented a token of esteem by fans.

TENDLER

later in the round opened an old wound on Tendler's head.

Both of the blows were right hand smashes. The first was a short right to the jaw which caught the veteran Philadelphian off balance and sent him crashing to the canvas. The blow had all of the earmarks of a haymaker but Tendler, game to the end, struggled to his feet at the count of eight and fell into a clinch.

In the final three rounds, the eighth, ninth and tenth, Tendler closed up and devoted his attention to warding off a knockout. The veteran's defensive craft proved too much for the over-anxious youth, trying frantically to land a finishing punch.

Tendler, who was waging his famous duel with Benny Leonard, the retired light-weight champion, when Hudkins, was attending grammar school in Cornhusker land was attempting a comeback which he hoped would start him on the road to the welter-weight throne.

The left handed Philadelphian, who has been fighting for 16 years earned his right to the shot at Hudkins by three splendid recent showings. He knocked out Jack McLarnin, with the rockbound chin, outpointed Hilario Martinez and fought a close decision on the coast.

Expect $100,000 Racer to Hit 220 Per

LONDON, Jan. 2.—(A. P.)—Belief that his new racing car, the "Bluebird," built at a cost of £20,000 sterling especially for an attempt to break the world's automobile speed record at Daytona Beach, is capable of achieving a speed of 220 miles an hour, was expressed today by its owner and designer, Capt. Malcolm Campbell.

The "Bluebird" is on display in this city and with its 900-horsepower motor is attracting a good deal of attention.

Capt. Campbell said that he had not told anyone what the "Bluebird" will actually make as to speed, but said he thought he should be in a position to meet an American challenger for speed supremacy soon, adding that his machine is as easy to control as an ordinary light car.

Campbell will take the "Bluebird" to America about February 1.

Tex Sidetracks Battle Plans, Seeks Home

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Jan. 21.—Tex Rickard will have nothing to do or say about the next fight for Gene Tunney until he has found a winter home in Miami Beach for his wife and baby.

His family was with him when he arrived from New York and he said he would find a house for them before starting the parleys out of which will come definite announcement of the next heavyweight championship fight.

Rickard and his wife and baby, meanwhile, are staying at the Roney Plaza, where Tunney is resting between rounds of golf and plunges in the surf.

Sirs—

I am a veterinarian. Yesterday evening, after spending a hard day at the dog hospital, I drove over to the home of a prominent actress to take a look at her dogs. While at dinner I asked her how her dogs were. Imagine my embarrassment when she replied: "They're O. K. but for two corns."

SEND A TELEGRAM OF CHEER TO MR. FRISBY

It Costs Very Little and You Are Entitled to a Chance to Better Yourself.

Beautiful gift presented to Congressman Frisby by the Widows of Prohibition Agents.

By MISTER FRISBY,
Congressman-at-Large.

WASHINGTON—First let me thank my unknown friends who sent me the beautiful basket of fruit and preserves in recognition of my tireless work.

Let me say that I have attractively arranged the fruit upon my desk as a lesson to other Congressmen who have not conducted themselves in a manner quite so worthy, I'm afraid.

If any one intends sending me a chicken or a turkey, let me know early enough, so I won't go to the bother and expense of buying provisions only to be wasted. I might be taking food from hungry mouths if I needlessly buy a hen or a duck, and, besides, the market places are so crowded and I have a slight cold. If I hadn't lost my rubbers I wouldn't mind so much.

And, in the meantime, let us all co-operate—one for all and all for one.

"You Said It, Marceline!"

By MARCELINE d'ALROY

ON "NERVE—AND NERVES"

Some WOMEN have NERVES.
These are very troublesome.
And they often LOSE their Friends, Others have NERVE—
These often USE their friends
And get along very NICELY.
Some men are ROUGH and READY.
That is, they are crude in Conversation, but
Always READY to do others
A KINDNESS. Other men are pretty
SMOOTH; they are always READY
To do themselves a good TURN.
Now, it happens that many NERVOUS
Women get hold of very ROUGH
And ready HUSBANDS.
COULD it be because the
Men are ever so rough and
Ready that their wives become Nervous? WHO can TELL?
Not their WIVES, for they certainly
Are not going to give others credit
For THEIR nerves. And not the MEN, for surely no husband
Would have NERVE enough for
That. And SO it goes on,
MARRIAGE gets on some women's NERVES. Other women have
Been IMPROVED by it. As a
Matter of fact, though, it is
NOT NERVE that is needed after Marriage — it's ENDURANCE.

BUGS BAER Says

JIM COFFROTH sends out his winter book for the Coffroth Handicap, to be run on March 18.

The winter book is a slow bet. You pay in the winter and lose in the spring.

The slogan of the book is play or pay. If your hoss runs and wins, you collect. If he doesn't start at all, you lose your dough.

ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER

Some of the future booking is very liberal. Jim will pay 100 to 1 against Black Maria.

Black Maria is the springer who won all those races around Belmont, Bowie, Jamaica and Saratoga. The best price we remember against her was 1-2 and out.

But Jim can afford to lay 100-1 against Black Maria, for Maria will not start at Tia Juana. She won't even be there. When the Coffroth Handicap is being run in Mexico, Miss Maria will be crunching oats in Mr. Coe's barn in Tennessee.

When you plank a bet on the winter book you take a chance of your choice not starting. You also take the chance of not collecting when your hoss wins. We remember Zev winning the Kentucky Derby. He started in the December catalogues around 20-1. He was backed down to almost even and won his race. The bookies who laid the December odds sang the laughing song from bankruptcy. There wasn't enough money minted to pay off on Zev.

Display is also 100-1 in the winter books. He was never better than 10-1 in the east. But this is January, and Display may yet sprain his leg throwing snowballs at the bookies.

Black Gold is 150-1, and it would be a fair price if Black Gold didn't happen to be in the hoss hospital.

Adois at 80-1 sounds very logical. Adois means goodby, but does not include the salutations for a pleasant journey.

If you want a good price take 500-1 against Johnny Callahan. If that hoss is as old as the jockey it is named after it should be the wheel nag on Ben Hur's chariot.

Conquistador also starts at 500-1. He has won some races, but you're playing a tune on a wishbone when you think you will ever collect that price on him.

If a 500-1 hoss ever came down the stretch at Kentucky, Tia Juana or Saratoga, one of the judges would lean out of the coop and shoot him before he reached the line.

We will state the prices in the winter books are very liberal. But before you place any January dough on the hoss find out whether the nag is in a stall in a barn or in a glass case in the Museum of Natural History.

Automobile Only American Product Giving Us More For Money Than in 1914

The automobile is the type of American industrial supremacy in the world,

The Pittsburgh Automobile Show, opening tonight in Motor Square Garden, is an annual birthday party to the nation's favorite child,

Pittsburghers have long been too wise to miss the annual festival. And thousands of outsiders journey here to attend it, too,

The motor car is the romantic event in the lives of this generation,

We have watched it develop from a rich man's luxury to the necessity of the common people,

It has revolutionized real estate values, urban and suburban life. It has brought the country and the seashore to the city. It has provided each family with its own little private railroad.

It has motorized and civilized the farm. It has vastly increased the scope of the individual business enterprise. It has given wings to business and pleasure alike. It has done more than any other modern invention to satisfy our longing to be free.

Of all American products the automobile alone gives us more for our money than we could buy in 1914, in spite of the rise in wages and materials,

On the average we pay 60 per cent more for our purchases than before the war—the increase in rent is over twice that great. On the average it costs about twice as much to live as before the war. Only the automobile costs less,

It costs less because in this protected American market the manufacturer is able to produce on such a scale that he can sell cheaper than the foreign manufacturer, who has lower wages but a smaller market.

The unrestricted competition in the motor industry has caused economies in production to be regularly passed on to the consumer in the form of lower prices,

This business is an illustration of the perfect success of the protective tariff policy, which is less popular in the case of industries where monopoly appropriates for itself all the advantages of lowered production costs.

This year the motor industry cuts another melon for the public. The re-entry of Ford with his new car has forced a cut in the price and an improvement in the product of all low and medium-priced automobiles,

The competition of price and quality has spread to the highest range of cars, for each grade is in competition with the grade next above it, and a revolution in the lower levels has got them all going like a tumbling house of cards,

Those who are best informed predict that in 1928 we shall see five million new cars sold in the United States, half a million more than in 1926, the record year, and a million and a half more than 1927.

This will mean five hundred million dollars more than ever before, earned by America's second largest and best loved industry.

But the automobile industry is not a far-away matter of statistics. It is a living, breathing business, close to each one of us.

This year an unequalled number of prima donnas will appear in Motor Square Garden.

As distinguished from most shows, in this case you can afford to hire your favorite to go home with you and perform for you three hundred and sixty-five days of each of the next five years.

Mt. Lebanon School Vote Shows Suburban Progress

Voters of Mt. Lebanon Township, which already has two new modern school buildings, have voted to increase the bonded indebtedness of the township by $230,000 for school purposes. For two new buildings there will be $100,000 each, $30,000 having been voted to purchase a site for a new high school.

Mt. Lebanon Township, undoubtedly, is the richest township in the county. Virtually a thriving and populous city, it is unique, being neither borough nor city. It has fire, health, building inspection and other "departments," hundreds of beautiful homes and miles of well paved streets, yet it remains a township.

Those who think Pittsburgh is making progress slowly should visit the South Hills and have their faith renewed. Where farms were 10 years ago now are masses of buildings. Where farms were two years ago charming homes are springing up with a rapidity that suggests the influence of an Aladdin. This is true of all of the South Hills, but especially so of Mt. Lebanon, where the transformation of farm to city is so swift as to cause gasps of wonderment.

In voting nearly a quarter of a million for new schools Mt. Lebanon citizens show their progressiveness. Some day they will be expected to make their city in the country part of the city of Pittsburgh, which it really is anyway. It is to be hoped that when that time comes they will show a spirit equally as progressive.

Mellon Not Too Old For President's Task

There is something unconvincing in the argument that Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, 74, is too old for the burdens of the President.

In the first place, the burden of being President is not any greater than the burden of being Secretary of the Treasury, who must run the biggest business enterprise in the world and at the same time attempt prohibition enforcement, which alone is sufficient to put most men in their graves. The President is free from the stupendous burden of administrative detail which Mr. Mellon has carried.

Plenty of men older than he are doing, and have done, great work in the world. Goethe wrote the second part of "Faust" when past 70. Michael Angelo painted magnificently after 80 and Titian was 90 when the plague killed him.

Edison, past 80, is one of the hardest and most effective workers in the country. George F. Baker, chairman of the board of the First National Bank of New York, and the most powerful financial personality in the country, is 88.

President Hindenburg of Germany is 81.

FOCUS OF POPULAR INTEREST

Garrett P. Serviss Says:

Where War Thrives

WHAT does nature care for man? One might ask that question again, with renewed bitterness, in view of the facts which, according to Science Service, the government entomologists have been finding out concerning the insect parasites that destroy the other insect parasites which have lately been mobilized with promising results in the war against the gypsy, and the brown-tailed moths. They call these new enemies "hyperparasites," meaning to say "parasites upon parasites."

This is the way they work: A particularly effective enemy of the gypsy moth was found in the apanteles, an insect of the order of the ichneumon flies which are great hunters of the larvae of injurious insects, even spearing them with their ovipositors through walls of woody fibre. The terrible gypsy moth seemed doomed to fall before the attacks of this searching enemy, which, to the delight of the entomologists, could produce two generations of armed destroyers every year. But presently it was found that the productivity of apanteles was so completely counteracted by the attacks of crowds of some thirty-five kinds of hyperparasites, that hardly one per cent of each new generation survived to fight under the flag of the government.

Instead of caring for man and his interests, and helping him in his war for the possession of the earth against the swelling insect hosts, nature amuses herself by bringing out species that fight and live upon one another. She keeps man in the humiliating category of an unfavored contestant in the struggle for existence, and seems to cry out like the old frontiersman's indifferent wife: "Go it, husband! go it, bear!"

Yet, it can not be said that nature is any more tender in her regard for the insects than she is toward man. She likes to see the contest waver. She has a real old Roman appetite for blood in the arena—let the welkin ring, let the sand turn red! Consider, for instance, what she does with the hyperparasites.

"She sets "tertiary parasites" to prey upon them.

It is a circle of slaughter. Man's "beneficient" allies spear the gypsy moth, and other foes of the vegetation that man lives on and rejoices in; the hyperparasites spear the beneficient allies; and then the tertiary parasites come and spear the hypers. The tertiaries are our latest allies—ugly things!

"Men may cry 'peace! peace!' but there is no peace."

The superstructure of life rests on war in nature. The bitter truth of Dean Swift's satirical verses presses upon the mind:

"So, nat'ralists observe, the flea
Hath smaller fleas that on him prey,
And these have smaller fleas to bite 'em.
And so proceed ad infinitum."

Darwin was right. Life is a fight for life.

Man shall not have even salvation without fighting for it. His most dangerous foes are the least visible. But he has invisible friends also. Greece fell because of internal discord. Perhaps the threatened insect empire will be dissipated before it can form by the war of parasite upon parasite.

Firm Foundation

DON'T blame all your failures on your early training.

It is easier to lay the blame at the door of your teachers, your parents or your companions, rather than take the blame yourself for your mistakes.

It is harder to look yourself squarely in the face, and see what you might have done to reach the top, in spite of drawbacks.

If you have a higher standard than your companions, you must be prepared to suffer more than they in reaching your ideal.

The pinnacle worth striving for leaves many a bruised spot as the result of trying to reach your goal

Apply plenty of spiritual arnica and keep climbing.

Rest frequently and take stock of your resources.

Catch your breath and get up and at it again.

Perhaps you have not gone to the bottom of things to find out what is the real cause of your failure.

It is hard to step down, but it is better to take time to strengthen your foundation than it is to try to build on a shaky base. Take courage—dig.

FIGURES of life insurance companies show that 1927 was our healthiest year. Figures of the State Banking Department show that it was also our wealthiest. Whether there was an equal gain in wisdom may, perhaps, best be left to the debating societies.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McINTYRE

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—The underworld classes men who have spent 10 years or more in prison as "stir bugs." It is the specious theory the monotony of long confinement leaves them with a mental twist of one sort or another.

The police say men who have spent long stretches in prison are far more dangerous to arrest. They know what the tedium of life in a cell means and will not submit to another "rap" without a desperate struggle. They will seldom hesitate to kill when freedom is again in jeopardy.

Men who have endured long terms are instantly spotted by those who have had similar experience. The routine of confinement gives them a certain manner that escapes the casual eye, but the ex-convict will recognize it even in a passing crowd.

Underground communication in prisons has always baffled wardens and other attaches. Even prisoners are unable to explain the phenomena. But when something happens affecting prison life it becomes known in an incredibly short time all over the prison, when perhaps not a word has been spoken.

A former Sing Sing convict tells me almost every prisoner knows when there is to be a "break." He does not know why and, of course, never imparts his secret. He also said old-timers could carry on a sort of telepathic conversation through steel walls.

Most convicts, when released, go immediately to large cities—preferably New York or Chicago—because they can more easily hide their identity and get into touch more quickly with those with prison pasts who are sympathetic.

There is a certain Turkish bath in downtown New York which is a point of contact for newly released convicts. If they have determined to continue a life of crime, the resort is also a clearing house of information and a recruiting station for various "mobs."

German comedians, whose conversation explodes like a bottle of pop, are rarely seen any more in New York. The excellent Jack Pearl is about the only one left. Louis Mann, with the passing of Sam Bernard at sea, is the only active survivor of the old guard and he has not appeared this season. Joe Weber and Lew Fields are producing. The late fuss shunted many excellent "Dutch" comedians to the background and most of them changed their dialect.

Nothing calls for such smooth running as a theatrical performance. A slight hitch will throw the audience as well as players topsy-turvey. The other night lights dimmed for the curtain in a Broadway theater and there were three or four moments of black stillness. It was a tense drama and suspense centered about the next and final act. Pict began to shuffle and there was a tittering here and there—then the lights came on and revealed the curtain had stuck. It was finally lifted, but interest in the play had vanished and the contagion spread to players who awkwardly and despairingly fumbled their lines until the curtain fell.

One stage manager, it seemed to me, had the right idea season before last. In the middle of the first act two sections of a scenic set fell across the stage barely missing the players. The curtain was rung down—and the play was started all over again.

* * *

In a musical shop I notice accordions with music rolls, like that of a player piano. The rolls are inserted and by pumping the accordion a know-nothing may give the impression of being adept with the instrument.

* * *

Ask a friend for the definition of an accordion and watch him pump his arms. Old, but usually effective.

* * *

In a Park avenue restaurant the other evening a beautifully gowned lady slumped from her chair to the floor in a dead faint. Revived in an ante-room, it developed she had suddenly glance at her hand and found a solitaire diamond ring, worth $18,000, missing. It was found later at home.

Good Move From Bad Mover

By DR. FRANK CRANE

Soviet Russia at Geneva challenged the entire world to disarm.

It offered to destroy its own land, sea and air forces, provided other nations would do the same.

It is reported that this proposition left the delegates stunned and gasping for an answer.

It seems all right to make cautious moves in the direction of peace, but when somebody comes right out with a definite proposal to abandon war entirely, that is another matter.

At the same time let us put this proposition down to the credit of Russia. Even the devil should have his due. We have all lambasted Russia enough for various things, but when she does good we ought to compliment her.

We will say that our only regret was that this Russian proposition did not come from the United States.

War will never cease until some nation thoroughly prepared for war, if it should come, says to the other nations of the world, "I will quit if you will."

The only trouble with Russia's proposition is that it comes from a nation thoroughly discredited, a nation that is too poor to go to war and a nation whose other proposals were regarded as not being in good faith.

But it is a good proposal just the same, and what a forward step would have been taken if Great Britain and France had said, in effect, that Russia's idea was a good one and they would join in!

Other nations may have begrudged giving Russia the credit for beginning universal peace, but that is an unworthy feeling, for what does the credit amount to provided we get the goods? The idea is a good one, whatever source it comes from.

This world would spring forward with an enormous bound toward prosperity and universal welfare, it would make the greatest move for progress ever made in history if all nations simultaneously would agree never to go to war and not to get ready for war.

Simply to cross war off as one of the possibilities of the future would mean eliminating the limit to economical prosperity and all the world would advance as it never has advanced before.

Tales That Are Told

Forced Truth

AN unknown actor was summoned to appear as a witness in a law case. On entering the witness box he took the oath in the usual way and stated his occupation.

"What sort of actor are you?" he was asked.

"Well," hesitated the actor, "if you insist, I am the best actor in the world."

His evidence concluded, he was leaving the court when he met an old acquaintance who had listened to the case.

"Hallo!" cried his friend. "What on earth made you say that you were the best actor in the world?"

The actor paused dramtically.

"Well, you see, old boy, I had to," he said smoothly. "Remember, I was on oath."

Knew All About It

AN ACCIDENT had happened in a country lane. A huge and well-laden lorry skidded on the wet road and overturned a farmer's market cart.

"You'd better go and find your employer," the driver of the motor advised the half-frightened lad who stood looking at his load of vegetables strewn all over the road.

The youth turned a puzzled face towards the speaker.

"'E knows, maister," he said.

"But how can he know?" persisted the lorry driver.

"'Cos 'e's underneath!"—London Answers.

Found Out

THEY were waiting for one other person to complete the Christmas party. At last she arrived, breathless with her exertions to be in time.

After the usual apologies and seasonable greetings she shook hands with her host and hostess and their little son; but the host said to the boy:

"You'll kiss Miss Vereker, won't you, Jimmie?"

Little James looked up into the face of the exceedingly pretty girl standing before him, then he turned to his father

"No fear," he replied. "I saw her slap you, daddie, for doing it."

LISTEN, WORLD! ELSIE ROBINSON Says: If I Were a Judge

IF I were a Judge—

And some unhappy wife came to me asking a divorce—

Because her husband didn't act like a lover any more and wouldn't take her out to parties, and had no sympathy with domestic troubles and growled at the bills and threw a fit if meals were late or the house untidy or the children noisy—

If a wife poured forth such a tale to me I would grant her a divorce on one condition—THAT SHE UNDERTAKE FOR SIX MONTHS TO SUPPORT SOME WOMAN AND HER CHILDREN.

I'd let her discover how it feels to ooze out in the chill, gray dawn while the Missis lies snug in bed—

How it seems to drudge for eight hours under the buzzard eye of the boss—no half hour off to lie down and read that snappy serial—no neighborly phone calls or chats over the back fence—just a steady grind for eight mortal hours at the same old job in the same old chair with the same old sonuvaguun yelling at you for speed.

I'd let her discover what it means to wake and sleep with the thought of Another's Need tap-tap-tapping at brain and heart like an infernal riveting machine. How it seems to be gripped by that nightmare, which every man knows—the nightmare of What-Would-Happen-If-I-Fell-Sick.

I'd let her discover what it means to slug along all day, looking ahead to the evening's rest as a starving man looks to a meal, and then come home to nagging and confusion, an empty kitchen or a wife gone to the movies.

I'd give her a taste of what debt means to a driven man—and how whining wakes a million devils in his weary soul—

And then, when the six months were over, I'd ask her if she understood her husband's "cruelty" a little better.

I BET SHE WOULD!

If I were a Judge—

And some disgruntled husband came to me requesting divorce—

Saying that his wife was no longer his "mental companion"—that she cared only for housework and babies—that she didn't understand him—that she was as dull as dishwater and, in short, a complete Fiat Tire—

I'd grant him divorce on one condition — THAT HE WORKED FIRST FOR SIX MONTHS AS WIFE AND MOTHER IN THE AVERAGE HOME.

I'd let his rest be broken nightly by a crying baby.

I'd let each day be filled with a repetition of tiresome duties, duties for which he had no deep interest and in which he could take no great pride—

I'd let him see what effect the drudgery and monotony of cooking, ironing, mending, scrubbing, nursing, baby-tending and other domestic chores have on a woman's health, looks, disposition, pep and intelligence after she had done them for 14 hours a day, seven days in the week, four weeks in the month, 12 months in the year, year after year.

I'd force him, for those six months, to give up all his pet amusements and ambitions, and subordinate all his personal interests to the service of others—

And then when he was down and out and had taken the count, I'd ask him if he understood his wife's dullness a little better.

I BET HE WOULD.

The Rhyming Optimist

By ALINE MICHAELIS

Old Faces

THERE is a beauty which all eyes can see
In youth's unmarred, untarnished loveliness,
Unshadowed yet by hints of destiny,
With naught of pain or sorrow to confess.

Its charms are like the meadow's green in spring,
A thing whose very fleetness makes it dear,
Or like the apple orchard blossoming
While April woos them with her smile and tear.

But deeper beauty do the years reveal
In glimpses of old faces, lined and seamed,
When life upon their brows has set its seal
And men may read what dreams their souls have dreamed!
